The title-page and index of volume seventeen of the Monthly Bulletin will be issued with the Bulletin for February 1913.

Reviews of Recent Books

The American Occupation of the Philippines, 1898-1912

By James H. Blount

"Judge Blount has spent six years in the Philippine Islands; two years as an officer in the volunteer army, and four years as district judge under the civil government established there by President Taft. He must know the Philippine situation, therefore, much more intimately than a mere resident would know it: his experience as a judge brought him into direct relations with the Filipinos on the one hand, and with the Government on the other; while his connection with both the army and the civil régime should enable him to judge impartially the disputes between the civil and military authorities. Besides, he has apparently examined carefully all the official documents necessary to an understanding of the policy of the United States Government, and he has doubtless read most of the controversial literature on the subject. Naturally, Judge Blount has his prejudices, like any one else; but he writes from experience and excellent first-hand knowledge, and he writes with an honest purpose." Nation, 1912.

"To have gone out to the other side of the world with an army of invasion, and had a part, however small, in the subjugation of a strange people, and then to see a new government set up, and, as an official of that government, watch it work out through a number of years, is an unusual and interesting experience, especially to a lawyer. What seem to me the most valuable things I learned in the course of that experience are herein submitted to my fellow-countrymen, in connection with a narrative covering the whole of the American occupation of the Philippines to date.

This book is an attempt, by one whose intimate acquaintance with two remotely separated peoples will be denied in no quarter, to interpret each to the other. How intelligent that acquaintance is, is of course altogether another matter, which the reader will determine for himself.

The task here undertaken is to make audible to a great free nation the voice of a weaker subject people who passionately and rightly long to be also free, but whose longings have been systematically denied for the last fourteen years, sometimes ignorantly, sometimes viciously, and always cruelly, on the wholly erroneous idea that where the end is benevolent, it justifies the means, regardless of the means necessary to the end." Preface.

Under the Old Flag

By James Harrison Wilson

"Of these two volumes of 1,162 pages, seven-eighths are filled with the author's recollections of the War for the Union. He disclaims any purpose to write a history or a military treatise, but his pages are replete with terse discussion of military plans and performance. Not since Grant's Memoirs has there appeared any book relating to the great war possessing the interest of Gen. Wilson's. His experiences from 1861 to 1865 were singularly varied. He graduated from the Military Academy at West Point near the top of his class. He served under Hunter and T. W. Sherman on the coast as chief topographical engineer, as assistant engineer on McClellan's staff at Antietam, as engineer on Grant's staff at Vicksburg and in the Chattanooga campaign, as chief of the Cavalry Bureau at Washington, as commander of a cavalry division under Sheridan in Grant's '64 campaign, and under Sheridan in the Shenandoah Valley, and as the chief of a cavalry corps under Thomas at the battle of Nashville and in the pursuit of Hood. Finally, at the head of an army of some 14,000 troopers, he defeated the redoubtable Forrest and captured Selma, Montgomery, and Macon, and ran down Jefferson Davis.

It is doubtful if any other officer saw so many phases of the war or was brought into closer contact with so many of its leaders, civil and military, or won the confidence of so many of the great captains in the East and West... The spirit of the free lance is manifested in every chapter of Gen. Wilson's book. Gen. Thomas alone draws forth the author's complete approval and admiration. He thought him more like Washington than any man he had ever met... He becomes fairly indignant at Grant's treatment of Thomas before the latter's great victory over Hood at Nashville in December, 1864...

Not many years ago the author's comment upon the leaders in the great war would have started excited and angry controversy, and yet, in the main, his criticisms do not go beyond the fact. Sherman's brilliant mind, he says, was destructive, not constructive. Sherman is declared to have been slow on the march to Chattanooga, and again at Missionary Ridge he is arraigned for being slow and ineffective. His famous march to the sea, leaving the main task and responsibility, that of disposing of Hood's army, to Thomas, is commented upon briefly and harshly. Sherman, the author says, was not the man for bold and conclusive operations. It is upon Sheridan, however, that the criticism, direct and indirect, falls most heavily. He gives Sheridan occasional words of hearty, general praise, but his specific statements and his presentation of evidence mostly lead in the opposite direction...

Thrown, as Gen. Wilson was, into personal contact with Lincoln, Stanton, and a long list of famous or well-known civilians, these recollections of a varied life in times of peace and war have not a dull page...

Gen. Wilson's book justifies itself by its vigor and great interest. It presents evidence and analysis in every chapter which the historian will have to consider and use...The courage of [the] book is as remarkable as its vitality." Nation, 1912.

Waterways Versus Railways

By Harold G. Moulton

"This well-written book must be reckoned with by the champions of waterways, for it is a straightforward discussion of the entire problem, and lets in light upon the many weaknesses in their arguments. Much stress has been laid recently upon the success of waterways in Europe, and upon our neglect to take similar advantage of our opportunities. The author, by personal investigation, finds a decline in the amount of traffic carried on inland water routes in Europe proceeding side by side with the development of railways. This declining movement has continued unchecked in England to the present time. It has been stayed on the Continent only by active Government intervention. The states of Europe have been obliged to assume virtually all the fixed charges connected with water transportation, and to turn the water routes over free of toll to the water carriers. Not infrequently the Governments have been compelled to fix railway rates from 20 to 50 per cent. higher than the bare charge for boat carriage in order that the waterways might not be idle.

Passing to the United States, the author follows the same painstaking methods in the examination of the projects that have been most vigorously advocated here. It is estimated that the visionary lakes-to-gulf ship canal would probably cost a billion dollars, that a traffic nearly double that of ports like Philadelphia, Boston, and New Orleans would be necessary to effect savings over rail transportation sufficient to meet merely the annual outlays, and that it is almost certain that no considerable number of ocean vessels could be induced to use such a waterway even if free of tolls. 'Fourteen feet through the Valley' would be of no service to lake or ocean vessels, and would be deeper than is necessary for barges. 'Eight feet from lakes to gulf' is possible from the engineering standpoint, but traffic contiguous to the waterway is not sufficient to warrant construction, and trans-shipment costs from rail to water would be prohibitive.

Although traffic conditions are more favorable on the Ohio River, the author's exhaustive examination of cost of improvement and maintenance of the channel results in the conclusion that from the standpoint of the nation the expenditure is not economically justifiable...

In short, the fundamental thesis of the book is that the cost of water transportation has not been accurately determined until all the factors entering into total cost have been taken into account—the costs, that is, of construction and maintenance, met commonly by taxation, as well as the mere charges for carriage. Such cost is just as truly a burden on the people when disbursed through Government channels as when included in the rate charged. The author places the canal alongside the hand-loom and the spinning jenny of an earlier generation, and insists that to return to this antiquated form of transportation is to turn backward the clock of time." Nation, 1912.

Harriet Hosmer; Letters and Memories

Edited by Mrs Lucien Carr

"Four years have passed since Harriet Hosmer's death, at the age of seventy-seven; and the interval has sufficed for collecting her more important correspondence and preparing therefrom and from other sources a good account of her life and work...[It is] a substantial volume of nearly four hundred pages, well-printed, well-illustrated, and teeming with matter of interest to all who take pleasure and pride in the achievements of this brilliant American woman and famous sculptor...Mrs. Carr gives us some admirable specimens of Miss Hosmer's fun, and among them a few stanzas of delicious French doggerel composed at Mrs. Sedgwick's school at Lenox, where Fanny Kemble made friends with her...Most numerous and most characteristic are the letters to her old friend and patron, Mr. Wayman Crow, of St. Louis, father of her favorite classmate, and greatly helpful to her in procuring her admission to the course in anatomy at the medical school of the State University of Missouri. Miss Hosmer's Italian years fell in the time of the Brownings, and of course they and a host of other notables figure in her letters. The editor has done well to let her sculptor friend tell her own story, in large part; and it is one well worth reading." Dial, 1912.

Fifteen Thousand Miles in a Ketch

By Captain Raymond Rallier Du Baty

"A singularly graphic and interesting narrative, enlivened by a consistent good-humour and jolly wit which are thoroughly French...

From sheer love of adventure and exploration the author and his brother purchased and equipped a Boulogne fishing ketch of 48 tons... and set out on a fifteen-thousand-mile deep-sea voyage, by way of Rio de Janeiro and Tristan da Cunha to the little-known Kerguelen Islands of the Antarctic, and thence, after useful exploration work, to Port Melbourne.

The narrative is admirably concise and realistic, and withal, we think, it owes something to Defoe. It would delight a sailor, and, we are assured, would hold the interest of any healthy boy; yet it is full of information, which would be appreciated by a student. That is no small tribute to the literary gifts of the French master-mariner who wrote it." Athenæum, 1912.

Sociology

- Bernard, Luther Lee. r 301 B45
 Transition to an objective standard of social control. [1911.] University of Chicago Press.
 Thesis for Ph. D., University of Chicago.
 Attempts to show that the main current of present-day social theory is largely an outgrowth of utilitarianism and argues that our system of social values must be reconstructed, to fix the group rather than the individual as the measure of all things social.
- Blackmar, Frank Wilson. 301 B51
 Elements of sociology. 1908. Macmillan. (Library of economics and politics.)
 "References" at the end of each chapter.
 "The chief merit of the book from the theoretical side is that it gives an intelligent statement of the view-points of all the leading sociological writers. The chief merit from the practical side is that it touches upon a variety of vital and interesting problems in such a way as to tempt the student to go forward and specialize." American journal of sociology, 1905.
- Bowley, Arthur Lyon. 311 B66
 Elements of statistics. 1907. King. (Studies in economics and political science.)

Part 1 outlines the principles underlying social development; part 2 applies these principles to social problems and indicates methods of betterment. An excellent beginning textbook for college classes." A. L. A. booklist, 1910.

Durham, John George Lambton, earl of.

354-71 D94

Report on the affairs of British North America; ed. with an introduction by Sir C. P. Lucas. 3v. 1912. Clarendon Press.

v.1. Introduction.

v.2. Text of the report.

v.3. Appendixes.

"This report, one of the greatest state papers in the English language, laid down the principles, then unrecognized, which have guided British colonial policy ever since. . . With regard to the future government of British North America, Durham had at first inclined towards a federation of all the colonies on that continent, and this aim, afterwards achieved, remained in his eyes an ideal to be striven for; but as a more immediately practical policy he advised the legislative union of Upper and Lower Canada. . . He further urged the creation of an executive council responsible to the colonial legislature; he advised state-aided emigration on the broadest possible scale, and the formation of an intercolonial railway for the development of the whole country." Encyclopædia Britannica, 1910-11.

The first six chapters are devoted to the argument that arbitration cannot always take the place, either practically or beneficially, of the processes and results obtained by the free play of natural forces.

Moulton, Harold Glenn.

387 M94

Waterways versus railways. 1912. Houghton. (Hart, Schaffner & Marx prize essays in economics.)

"Bibliography," p. 459-465.

Straightforward discussion of the entire problem. The author finds, by personal investigation, a decline in the amount of traffic carried on inland water routes in Europe proceeding side by side with the development of railways, a similar falling off in England, and passing to the United States and examining the canal projects that have been advocated here, he pronounces them economically unjustifiable.

Music

Bahr-Mildenburg, Frau Anna, & Bahr, Hermann.

782.2 B15

Bayreuth and the Wagner theatre; tr. by T. W. Makepeace. [1912.]

Unwin.

Madame Bahr-Mildenburg is (1912) a well-known singer who took part in the Bayreuth festival performances. She and her husband give graphic descriptions of Madame Cosima Wagner and Herr Siegfried Wagner at rehearsals, of the cottage on the hill where the artists lived and practised during the festival season, the old opera-house in the town, the Jean Paul house, etc. They also deal with the future of the Bayreuth performances.

Greene, Harry Plunket. 784.9 G83

Interpretation in song. 1912. Macmillan. (Musician's library.)

Mr Plunket Greene is (1912) one of the most prominent concert singers of our time. His volume is not concerned with technique, which is taken for granted, but with the three possessions which the interpreter must have—magnetism, sense of atmosphere and command of tone-color. These topics are not discussed dily but are illustrated with interesting glimpses of actual happenings in concert-halls. The subject of breath control is dealt with in an appendix.

"On the kindred subject of the love of nature among the Greeks we have many books, but none that we know approaches in value this mature study of the great Roman poets, written by one who professes to be a mere amateur in the classics, and only to put on record a long labour of love, kept up from his schooldays, but enriched by a mastery of English poets from Shakespeare to Tennyson, as well as by intimate knowledge of the scenes in which the great Latin poets lived. The unsuspicious reader, who chanced not to know the author's name, would never for one moment suspect that here we have a first-rate man of science using his literary leisure." Athenaeum, 1912.

The new China; a traveller's impressions; tr. from the Dutch by C. Thieme. 1912. Unwin.

Meant more as an artistic than as a scientific work. My chief object is to avail myself of the poet's right to give a chain of personal and subjective impressions and to describe how I felt the tragic death of ancient beauty, overpowered by all that is ugly and vulgar in modern things. I want to record impressions I received when living in Peking at the beginning of reform through western civilization. Condensed from introduction.

Harriet Hosmer; letters and memories; ed. by Cornelia Carr. 1912. Moffat.

"These letters, ably edited and supplemented by a life-long friend, make a very satisfactory biography of the famous sculptor, who was also a fascinating woman. Since most of her life was spent in Rome, they give another interesting view of the notable group of English and Americans who have figured in so many recent biographies and letters. There are several letters from the Brownings, whom Miss Hosmer counted among the earliest and closest of her many friends. A greater part of the letters were written to Mr Wayman Crow, of St. Louis, to whom she owed her excellent beginning in her art. Illustrations include reproductions of her work, portraits, etc." *A. Arblay, Mme Frances (Burney) d'. Dr Johnson & Fanny Burney; being the Johnsonian passages from the works of Mme d'Arblay, with introduction and notes by C. B. Tinker. 1911. Moffat.

"It would be hard to find an aspect of Dr. Johnson's life which shows him in a more wholly charming light than do his relations with Fanny Burney. His deep and delicate affection for the prim little blue-stocking...illustrates, in the most touching manner possible, that infinite capacity for friendship which was Johnson's supreme genius. As Professor Tinker points out in the exceedingly able introduction with which he has prefaced his collection of Johnsonian references in the Burney diaries, it is in this faculty for unbounded personal enthusiasm, with its often misguided complement of dislike, that the secret of Johnson's reputation is to be found." Spectator, 1912.

- Sidgwick, Ethel. S5682p
 Promise [a novel]. Small.
 "The central figure of the book is a young musical genius, half English, half French, and the author's aim is to illustrate by means of incidents in his life the futility of all attempts to control artistic impulse. The five divisions of the story show how the Child of Promise is affected by the various persons with whom he is brought into contact."
Prefatory note.
- Wells, Herbert George. W4941m
 Marriage [a novel]. Duffield.
 Appeared in the "American magazine," v. 73-74, Nov. 1911-Oct. 1912.
 "Story of the married life of two educated people; of an exceptional man in whom the pursuit of knowledge is an unconscious religion, and of a woman able to form some conception of his aims, but far below his spiritual and mental level... The whole institution of modern marriage from top to bottom is discussed in this tale without a single unpleasant reference to the problems of sex." Academy, 1912.
- Wells, Herbert George. W4941n
 The new Machiavelli. Duffield.
 Appeared in the "Forum," v. 43-45, May 1910-June 1911.
 "The story takes the form of a retrospective self-analysis by an English statesman whose public career has been wrecked by a private scandal, and who, in exile and disgrace, uses his own history as the text and illustration for his theory of the relation between individual character and the great constructive spirit of modern science, politics, literature and art—a theory of the progressive growth of a collective mind behind the interplay of individual lives. The work is an astonishingly adroit and successful piece of self-expression." Everybody's magazine, 1911.

Wells, Herbert George.

Books for the Blind

The Library has a collection of about 1,400 books for the blind. The Pennsylvania Home Teaching Society and Free Circulating Library for the Blind supports in this district a teacher, herself totally blind, who, under the direction of this Library, visits the adult blind in their homes and teaches them to read. This service and the use of the books are absolutely free to all the adult blind in and near Pittsburgh, and the Librarian requests that names and addresses of such persons be sent to him in order that the teacher may call upon them.

Jack, the young trapper; an eastern boy's fur hunting in the Rocky mountains. Stokes.

"They were men of firm courage and stern resolution, those trappers of the early days" and Jack Danvers who spends a summer in the Colorado park region is taught some of the secrets of that now forgotten life by one who had borne a part in the work of subduing the wild West. He learns much of Indian beaver lore, of methods of trapping and of camp life in general.

Donkey John of the Toy valley. McClurg.

His real name was John Hofer and he lived high up among the mountains of the Tyrol where he herded goats in summer and coasted down the steep and dangerous snow-covered slopes in winter. How he went to live among the wood-carvers in the Toy valley, won his name of "Donkey John," saw the fair in the Town below the mountain and climbed the Big Alp, may be read in this story. Quaint drawings of toy animals at the head of each chapter.

The Reference Department

Although the use of the Reference Department of the Library is large and constantly increasing, the members of its staff are frequently reminded that there are many who either do not know of its resources, or who hesitate to use them except in matters of special importance. In order to make the use of this department more generally known, the Library issued a few months ago a small handbook explaining the resources of the department and the work of the assistants in helping the people of the city to make the fullest use of them.

In order that the readers of the Bulletin, who have not seen the handbook may understand the facilities of the department, the text is here reprinted.

The Reference Department of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh is the city's Bureau of Information. Any one, whether a resident of Pittsburgh or not, may have free use of its resources, and trained assistants are at hand to give assistance in all ways at any time.

The Reference Department is on the second floor of the Central Library in Schenley Park. It is open every week day except Christmas, Memorial Day and Fourth of July, from nine o'clock in the morning to ten at night, and on Sundays from two to six p. m. It contains 65,505 volumes, covering all subjects, except those of a scientific or technical nature. Books on these subjects may be obtained in the Technology Department on the third floor of the Library. All the books in the Central Library, numbering 212,667, are available for use in this department.

The Reference Room contains about ten thousand of the most useful reference books, placed on open shelves freely accessible to all; a complete card catalogue of all the books in the Library, whether belonging to the reference, technology, lending or children's collections; also a card index to reviews of books that have been published since 1900.

The purpose of the Reference Department is to find for any one information desired on any subject. Its work is with the public in general, and with clubs, teachers and classes. Business and professional people, special students and casual inquirers may all find material here on the subjects in which they are interested, and tables are reserved for individuals, for classes, study clubs and debating clubs, with books for their special use. Reading lists of the best books on any subject will be made for any one who wishes assistance in pursuing some special line of reading or study.

There are three ways of using the Reference Department :

First, by going to the Library in person and selecting, with the help of an assistant if the reader wishes, books and magazine articles on his subject. These may be used in the room, or the circulating books may be borrowed for home use.

Second, by writing to the Reference Librarian asking that the desired information be sent by mail.

Third, by telephoning for information, which is given at once if possible. If the question is of such a nature that it requires research, the inquirer will be called when the information is ready. The Library telephone number is Schenley 1205 on week days from 8:30 a. m. to 5:30 p. m. During the evenings and on Sundays and holidays the Reference Department number is Schenley 1205x.

The Library is supplied with books on all subjects, available for reference use through the card catalogue and other indexes. Special attention has been paid to local history, art and architecture, music and ethics, special funds for some of these collections having been provided by interested citizens. A collection of thirty-eight city directories is useful.

A complete file of the United States public documents forms part of the reference collection, and the library of the American Philatelic Association is kept in this department.

Fifteen newspapers of Pittsburgh and other cities are bound each year, and the Library contains more or less complete files of the Pittsburgh Gazette Times, Chronicle Telegraph, Dispatch, Leader, Post, Press, and Sun, besides files of early Pittsburgh papers, such as the Tree of Liberty, the Mercury, and the Gazette from 1786. Complete sets of the principal magazines, both American and foreign, are also kept in this department.

In the Periodical Room, a division of the Reference Department, on the same floor, are the current numbers of newspapers and magazines and a number of other publications. In all, 1,038 different magazines and 118 newspapers are kept on file here.

The books in the Reference Department are supplemented by a collection of pictures which may be borrowed for home use. The collection consists of twenty-nine sets of stereographs arranged in tours of one hundred pictures each; mounted photographs of buildings, selected chiefly for their architectural importance; reproductions of famous paintings and sculpture; pictures illustrating historical costume; views of places, and a collection of 6,300 portraits, including men and women of the day.

Clippings and ephemeral material on topics of current and local interest are kept on file, and this collection is constantly being enlarged and brought down to date.

Most readers will find it convenient to go directly to a Library assistant with their requests, for much useful material is often hidden away in essays, books of miscellany, pamphlets and bound magazines, about which the ordinary reader may not know, and with which it is the business of the assistant to become familiar.

For special research workers books not contained in this Library will be borrowed from other libraries if desired. For those whose work requires special quiet and seclusion there are private rooms where they may have their reference books and be undisturbed. These rooms are also convenient for groups of people who wish to confer together concerning their work.

Readers may recommend books which they consider suitable additions to the Library by leaving a note of such books at the Reference Desk. These recommendations are submitted to the book committee each week and a report of the decision regarding them is mailed to the reader.

Copies of the Monthly Bulletin of the Library, giving an annotated list of the books added during the month, will be found at the Reference Desk. They are for free distribution at the Library, and will be mailed to any address for twenty-five cents a year. The Monthly Bulletin contains also a list of the catalogues, reference lists and other publications of the Library.

List of Additions to the Library

Arranged by Classes

January 1 to February 1, 1913

An r or b prefixed to the call number indicates that the book must be called for and used in the Reference or the Technology Room; j that it is especially suitable for children, and q that it is quarto size or larger.

Upon request from a borrower at any of the branches, any book in the Central lending collection, except works of fiction, will be sent to that branch and the person requesting the book will be notified of its arrival.

Main currents of modern thought; a study of the spiritual and intellectual movements of the present day [1912]; translation [of the 4th edition] by Meyrick Booth. 1912. Unwin.

"While the Jena professor's other recent works concern themselves in the main with the general exposition of his convictions, the present study reveals in detail the extensive groundwork upon which these convictions have been built up, and in particular it illustrates the various steps by which the author has been led to adopt the concept of the spiritual life as the basis of his whole philosophy... It is his belief that the supreme need of the age is a comprehensive, positive philosophy of life to serve as a rallying point for the scattered and divided forces of humanity." Translator's introductory note.

History of English literature from "Beowulf" to Swinburne. 1912.

Longmans.

"Selection of the most significant makers of English literature for inclusion in this comprehensive work has inevitably compelled important omissions, notably among writers of philosophy and theology. It is historical only in chronologic treatment, for the author hardly touches on the influence, development or correlations of the different periods and schools. The individual criticisms, however, have freshness of vision and felicity of phrasing, and are as a rule vital, discriminating and original." A. L. A. book-list, 1912.

Individual Biography

Crutchley, William Caius. 92 C898c

My life at sea; being a "yarn" loosely spun for the purpose of holding together certain reminiscences of the transition period from sail to steam in the British mercantile marine (1863-1894), with a preface by Earl Brassey. 1912. Chapman.

"Author is a master mariner of wide and varied experience, and his reminiscences of a long and successful career at sea are of exceptional interest, as they extend over a considerable portion of the period of transition from the small wooden sailing vessel to the gigantic steam-propelled and steel-constructed product of modern naval engineering. Captain Crutchley draws a realistic picture of the conditions of life in the mercantile marine in the early sixties, and there is much of special import to the nautical reader. He has, too, enlivened his pages with a host of breezy and amusing anecdotes, and the chapters dealing with his experiences on the South African service are noteworthy." Athenaeum, 1912.

Dryden, John Fairfield. qr 92 D851p

Prudential Insurance Company of America, comp. John Fairfield Dryden, founder and president the Prudential Insurance Company of America, pioneer of industrial insurance in America, United States senator. [1912.]

Autobiography of an individualist. 1912. Houghton.

Contents: Beginnings in Scotland.—Life problems in South America.—Travel and adventures in Africa.—Impressions of New England in the eighties.—Men and conditions on the railroads.—The individual in modern industry.—A study of three presidents.—The riddle of the railroads.—Let industry be free.

Born in Scotland in 1859 and educated in an English public school, Mr Fagan left home in his youth and after somewhat adventurous wanderings in South America and South Africa, came to America, where he has long been in the service of an important New England railroad. His ventures in the field of sociological and economic discussion, especially in regard to railroad problems, have won for him a wide hearing.

Lincoln, Abraham.

92 L715ni

Nicolay, Helen. Personal traits of Abraham Lincoln. 1912. Century.

When the author's father began his joint work with John Hay on Abraham Lincoln, he put aside certain items to be used in a chapter on personal traits. The material grew to undue proportions and the chapter as originally planned was not written. It is this material which his daughter has carefully worked over in the present book, which, while not adding greatly to our knowledge, affords an intimate view of the man and an interesting commentary on his private life. Illustrated.

"How the foes of God he slew;

How forth from the darksome desert the Gold of the Waters he drew;

How he wakened Love on the Mountain, and wakened Brynhild the Bright,

And dwelt upon Earth for a season and shone in all men's sight."

Perkins, Mrs Lucy (Fitch).

The Japanese twins. Houghton.

The twins are just five years old and they live in a dear little house in a queer little town in the middle of the Happy islands. The stories tell of the festival of dolls and of the feast of flags and of other happy times. Illustrated by the author with many pictures of Taro and Take and the baby.

Smith, Elmer Boyd.

Denmark, with illustrations by F. I. Hyldahl. 1910. Black. (Peeps at many lands series.)

Chapters on merry Copenhagen.—Hans Andersen.—Legendary lore and folk-dances.—The people's amusements.—Farm life.—Soldiers and sailors.—Fishermen at home and afloat.—Youthful Danes at work and play.—Ingeborg's journey through Seeland.

Thorne-Thomsen, Mrs Gudrun, ed.

j 398 T411

East o' the sun and west o' the moon, with other Norwegian folk tales, retold. 1912. Row.

Some of the best and most popular Norwegian fairy tales, including Three billy goats gruff.—Boots and his brothers.—The lad who went to the North Wind.—The pancake.—Why the sea is salt.—The squire's bride.—The princess on the glass hill.—The husband who was to mind the house.

All these stories have been told to children by the editor many times and retain much of the original folk-lore language and the conversational style of the teller of tales.

Williamson, Margaret.

j 914.1 W75

John and Betty's Scotch history visit. 1912. Lothrop.

After seeing the coronation of George V and Queen Mary in London, John and Betty with their kind English friends travel through bonny Scotland. They visit the misty isle of Skye, Inverness and Cawdor castle, Lochleven, Edinburgh, the land of Burns, Hawthornden, Melrose, Roslin and other storied places and hear the romantic legends and tales which are associated with them.

Exhibition of Photographs

A collection of photographs of buildings and scenery in France, Italy, Spain, Germany and England is on exhibition on the second floor of the Central Library. The larger collection, from which these are taken, includes also other photographs from these countries and many from other European countries. The pictures belong to the Reference Department, where they may be examined at any time. They may also be borrowed by study clubs or schools, or by any one who wishes them for home use.

Reviews of Recent Books

Unseen Empire

By David Starr Jordan

"In this book I have tried to tell in part the story of the bondage of the nations due to the cost of war and of war preparation. I have tried to show that civilized nations are one and all in their degree under the dominion of a power stronger than Kings or Parliaments, more lasting than Armies or Navies, that is, the Unseen Empire of Finance. I have tried to show that this mastery is not now in the hands of individual men, however powerful, but that it has passed over into an impersonal Empire of Debt. I have tried further to illustrate 'Johnson's law of waste,' to the effect that military expenditures among competitive nations expand in peace or in war as wealth expands, 'by the law that war shall consume the fruits of progress,' and, finally, to show a way in which our nation, at least, may possibly escape the operation of this law.

I have ventured to believe that Johnson's law is dependent on a lack of continuous purpose in popular governments, and that conditions may be changed by the growth of a robust public opinion opposed to war and debt, and by the extension of treaties of arbitration, which, while dependent on public opinion, yet serve to clinch and hold it in right channels. However great the burden of debt, it is in our hands to shift it. As Sir Edward Grey has said in this connection: 'The door of our prison is locked on the inside.' The way out lies in the unprejudiced survey of the whole situation on the part of a civilian commission of high minded statesmen who will ascertain the real needs of the people in the line of national defense, regardless of pressure arising from personal interests, from professional ideals of military perfection and from the tendency to follow blindly the fashion set by the 'Powers' of Europe. There is no final peace until the civilized nations cease to stand as 'Powers' rated according to their capacity to exercise external violence, becoming 'States' in the moral union of the world, each one, large or small, being primarily a district of legal and political jurisdiction, not a center of physical force. And at the end I have hoped to make it clear that war debt, the overlordship of the Unseen Empire, the 'war scare,' and secret diplomacy are all of them necessary stages in the passing of war." Author's introduction.

On the Laws of Japanese Painting

By H. P. Bowie

"For nine years Mr. Bowie worked under the best modern painters of Japan. He enjoyed as well the company of collectors and men of letters. Thus his book, though in bulk hardly more than a long essay, gives an intimate view of the traditions and procedures actually alive to-day in Japanese studios. There is less that is new than a reader of the preface would imagine, yet it would require the reading of a score of books to bring together an equivalent amount of information, and our author contributes vividness quite his own.

The training of a Japanese painter begins with the hand. There are years of tracing, copying, arranging, and condensing standard drawings before the aspirant is encouraged to create on his own account. In short, the training is not unlike that which a painter's apprentice received in the Renaissance. Mastery is attained through humble discipleship. But the training of the soul is even more characteristic. Choice feeling is especially required. To attain this, memory of all sorts, with literary and poetical associations, is freely evoked

...At every point there must be clear thinking and feeling, which, however, must not impair the spontaneity of the inspiration nor the power of the brush stroke...

When once the warning has been given that the Japanese painting of the nineteenth century is relatively decadent, no exception can be taken to this charming book. Nothing else in English gives the Japanese point of view towards art at once so clearly and compactly." Nation, 1912.

The Rhodes Scholarships

By George R. Parkin

"Probably no benefaction of recent times has aroused such widespread interest as that which the late Cecil Rhodes made to the University of Oxford. It was a spectacular and at the same time a very practical gift, eminently characteristic of the adventurer, idealist, and shrewd financier, who thought in millions and dreamed of empires, who deemed it worth his while, amid the strenuous toil of building his own fortune and a new empire for Britain, to spend portions of eight years at Oxford, acquiring the ordinary pass degree which the University awards to its mediocre scholars."

The scholarships which Rhodes endowed made a radical departure from precedent. They were the first official recognition that Oxford has more to offer to a student than the academic advantages set forth in her statutes... Now, after nine years, all doubts as to the practical nature of the scheme are set at rest, for already some 700 Rhodes scholars have passed through the Oxford course. The results of the experiment have been set forth by Dr. Parkin, the organizing secretary of the Rhodes Scholarship Trust.

On the whole, the careful analysis which he gives shows that the scheme has worked out well. He finds that in scholarship, pure and simple, students from America, as well as from the British colonies, are more often than not at some disadvantage when in competition with young Englishmen who have received their preliminary training in one or the other of the great public schools of the country; and he attributes this to lack of thoroughness in the groundwork of education. On the other hand, it is satisfactory to learn that Rhodes scholars, having become an established part of the university life, are accepted by the general student body solely on their individual merits; that there is no prejudice either for or against them as Rhodes scholars...

Of particular interest to American readers are the pages in which the author discusses the vexed question as to whether it is profitable for students from the United States to spend three years at Oxford. He states frankly the objections that have been raised—the time involved, the possible loss of touch with home affairs, and the practical worth of an Oxford degree—and while he endeavors to meet them all, there is an honest hesitation in his manner that seems to admit the force of the argument on the other side.

Both for the general reader and for the prospective candidate for a Rhodes scholarship the present volume will be of value and interest. The long first chapter, dealing with the life of Cecil Rhodes, is an excellent bit of biography, and succeeding chapters (two of them, concerning the more intimate details of the Oxford system, contributed by F. J. Wylie) give a commendably clear and readable account of the purpose of the foundation, the methods of its administration, and the advantages offered by an Oxford course." Nation, 1913.

The Home University Library of Modern Knowledge

Edited by Herbert Fisher, Gilbert Murray, and others

"This is a series of specially written books on subjects of importance and interest in the chief departments of human learning. These books are all of approximately uniform size (about 250 small pages) and are sold at the uniform price of fifty cents per volume. Each volume is complete in itself and is sold separately from others in the series ... The series is distributed among the fields of literature and art, philosophy and religion, history, natural science, and social science. The aim in each instance is to present the freshest information on each subject and to ignore discarded theories and hypotheses that have been found, as a result of modern research, to be clearly untenable. The books are admirably adapted to the needs of men and women who have not been able to specialize in particular fields of knowledge, but who wish to obtain accurate and sound ideas of what has been found out by the specialists. The series appeals less to the imaginative and dramatic instincts of readers than to the sober, earnest desire for knowledge that is often encountered in mature life. The volume on Polar Exploration, for example, instead of giving a narrative of the thrilling exploits of the various Arctic expeditions, summarizes, in a graphic and useful way, the precise results of those expeditions in the form of increased knowledge concerning the earth's surface, and the ... vegetable and animal life existing thereon... 'The Home University Library' is in no sense a reprint of classic texts. It is all new material, and represents the latest research and the most critical thought of those who are entitled to be regarded, by the English-speaking world at least, as masters of their several specialties." Review of reviews, 1912.

Wright, George Frederick. 573.2 W93

Origin and antiquity of man. 1912. Bibliotheca Sacra Co.

Interesting study and discussion of evidence offered by geology, with briefer attention to that given by history, philology, physiology and psychology. Author concludes that "while the antiquity of man cannot be less than ten thousand it need not be more than fifteen thousand years."

Chemistry

American Rolling Mill Co. Middletown, Ohio. 543.7 A51

[Methods for the analysis of iron and steel used in laboratories of the American Rolling Mill Co., Middletown, Ohio.] 1912.

The same.....r 543.7 A51

Some of methods described are practically the same as those described in standard text-books, others are entirely new.

"Intended as an aid to experienced chemists who are thoroughly conversant with the standard methods for the analysis of iron and steel." Preface.

Benedict, Francis Gano. qr 545.7 B43

Composition of the atmosphere, with special reference to its oxygen content. 1912. (Carnegie Institution of Washington. Publication no.166.)

Devotes 66 pages to historical development of methods for determining oxygen. Concerned mainly with uncontaminated air, but by way of comparison gives data on street and subway air.

Brauns, Reinhard. qr 549 B71m

Mineral kingdom; tr. with additions by L. J. Spencer. 1912. Schreiber.

Greatest value is in the many excellent plates showing natural color and luster of all the more important minerals. Text is accurate, but not highly technical. Discusses appearance and character of the various minerals, with considerable attention to economic mineralogy.

Cady, Hamilton Perkins. 546 C11

Inorganic chemistry. 1912. McGraw. (International chemical series.)

Clear, logical and well arranged. Teaches subject from standpoint of elementary physical chemistry, following plan of Ostwald's "Grundlinien," but is for less advanced students.

Intimations of immortality in the sonnets of Shakspeare. 1912. Houghton. (Ingersoll lectures on immortality.)

"An illuminating presentation of the suggestive theory that the unifying element throughout the sonnets of Shakespeare is the problem of immortality. Dividing them into three groups, the author considers each expressive of one definite type of eternal life—natural, ideal, spiritual—and he clearly develops this thought by analyzing and interpreting quoted examples. Of decided significance to Shakespearean students." A. L. A. booklist, 1913.

Leaf, Walter. 913.39 L45

Troy; a study in Homeric geography. 1912. Macmillan.

Contains maps.

"Consists of two portions, both of them valuable to Homeric students. The first is a brief but clear statement of the results of the more recent excavations of the city, together with a discussion of their relation to the Homeric story; the second is an historical and geographical investigation, based partly on personal knowledge of the Troad, partly on criticism of literary and other evidence." Athenaeum, 1912.

"The author, while endeavouring to make clear to his readers the sequence of recent events, has devoted the larger portion of his work to a description of the life of the people and a sympathetic delineation of their character, for which the fifty years spent by him in intimate association with them...have rendered him fully competent." Athenaeum, 1912.

Schäffer, Mrs Mary Townsend (Sharples).

917.12 S29

Old Indian trails; incidents of camp and trail life, covering two years' exploration through the Rocky mountains of Canada. 1912. Putnam.

"Light-hearted account of the two expeditions made by the author, a woman friend and guides in 1907 and 1908, through Alberta from the Canadian Pacific Railway to Moose Lake and Tête Jaune Cache. The finding of a theretofore uncharted lake is the only addition made to scientific knowledge, but the unaffected descriptions and the author's joy in the free life of the wilderness in spite of extreme hardships make the chapters good reading." A. L. A. booklist, 1912.

Histoire des Gaulois depuis les temps les plus reculés jusqu'à l'entière soumission de la Gaule à la domination romaine. 2v. 1859.

"This work, published first in 1828...has acquired the renown of a classic in French historical literature. It is an account of the relations of Gaul to Rome, presented, as far as possible, from the Gaulish point of view. A long introduction is devoted to the ethnology of the Gauls; this is followed by an account of their migrations; and this by a history of the people from the time of Brennus to the complete conquest of the country by the Romans." Adams's Manual of historical literature.

Thierry, Amédée Simon Dominique.

Tableau de l'empire romain depuis la fondation de Rome jusqu'à la fin du gouvernement impérial en Occident. 1891.

"Small book of the greatest importance...The design of the volume is a portrayal of the influence of Rome as a civilizing power at the head of universal society. It is its great merit that it gives a more adequate idea than has ever been given elsewhere in brief space of the consummate greatness of the Roman political organization. The author combines in the happiest manner powers of vivid description and broad generalization." Adams's Manual of historical literature.

Sunset of the Confederacy. 1912. Luce.

"Covers the period between Lee's loss of the outer lines before Petersburg and his final surrender that sealed the fate of the confederacy. It is a rambling narrative, written in the same easy colloquial style that the author no doubt uses in relating his war-time recollections to an old acquaintance—the best, probably, for his purpose, for in this, as in most volumes savoring of reminiscence, the most valuable element is the narrator's own reaction on the events in which he has taken part." Boston transcript, 1912.

China's revolution, 1911-12; a historical and political record of the civil war. 1912. McBride.

"Account of the revolution from its beginnings, the peace conference and establishment of the new republic, by an English war correspondent...who was resident in Hankow throughout the revolution and has the friendship of General Li Yuan Hung. His chapters are very full and probably as accurate as it is possible to obtain, and they will be valuable to students and educated readers. They are, however, characteristically journalistic in places, and contain a great deal that is unimportant to the average American reader. Good illustrations, two new maps and brief index." *A. L. Barrington, William Wildman, viscount, & Bernard,
Sir Frances.*92 B267b

Barrington-Bernard correspondence and illustrative matter, 1760-1770; drawn from the "Papers of Sir Francis Bernard;" ed. by Edward Channing and A. C. Coolidge. 1912. Harvard University. (Harvard historical studies.)

At the time of writing these letters, Bernard was governor of Massachusetts Bay and Lord Barrington was his political backer in England. The letters are chiefly concerned with Bernard's personal affairs, with securing places and pensions for himself and his children and increase of salary. Appendixes consist of papers relating to the functions of a provincial governor and a statement of the course of events in Massachusetts at the time of the tea troubles.

Gonzaga, Giulia, contessa di Fondi.92 G6212h

Hare, Christopher. A princess of the Italian reformation, Giulia

Gonzaga, 1513-1566; her family and her friends. [1912.] Scribner.

"Some books consulted," p.20-24.

Giulia Gonzaga was a cousin by marriage of Isabella d'Este and as a young girl in 1525 went under the protection of that great lady to Rome. She married Vespasiano Colonna and at 15 was a widow and the inheritor of a large part of her husband's vast estate. She never married again and after holding court at Fondi for some years, retired to a semi-religious life in a convent at Naples. The story of her life illuminates the period of the Italian reformation.

Grant, Gen. Ulysses Simpson.92 G789gr

Letters of Ulysses S. Grant to his father and his youngest sister, 1857-78; ed. by his nephew J. G. Cramer. 1912. Putnam.

The historical value of the letters is very slight. They are chiefly concerned with personal and family affairs. Even about the writer himself they tell little that is new, but they afford a fresh revelation of his simplicity of mind and heart.

"In the years from 1858 to 1875, Mme. De Hegermann-Lindencrone...undoubtedly knew everyone 'worth knowing.' She stayed long weeks with the Emperor Napoleon III., she danced with the Prince of Wales and acted charades with Metternich; and, almost every day, found time for a long, detailed, gossiping letter to her mother. These letters have now been published, and are a cleverly written record of long conversations, of compliment and excitement, of balls and picnics, of the Empire and the Commune." Spectator, 1912.

Macready, William Charles.

92 M224m

Diaries of William Charles Macready, 1833-1851; ed. by William Toynbee. 2v. 1912. Putnam.

These unabridged journals, covering 18 years of the actor's life, while showing in strong relief the most undesirable traits of his character are a considerable contribution to the history of the British drama. Macready knew many famous people both on and off the stage and he writes of them freely. Of interest to American readers are his accounts of journeys to this country, of his feud with Forrest and of the Astor place riots.

Putnam, George Haven. George Palmer Putnam; a memoir, with a record of the earlier years of the publishing house founded by him. 1912. Putnam.

George Palmer Putnam (1814-72) was founder of the publishing house of G. P. Putnam's Sons. As a publisher he came into touch with the leading authors of his day and he was a pioneer in the cause of international copyright.

Radziwill, Luise, fürstin.

92 R1363r

Forty-five years of my life (1770 to 1815); ed. by Princess Radziwill, née Castellane, and tr. by A. R. Allinson. 1912. McBride.

"Biographical index," p.403-458.

Princess Louise was a granddaughter of Frederick William I and a niece of Frederick the Great. Her memoirs form an important addition to our knowledge of the Napoleonic era from the point of view of the Prussian court.

Sidney, Sir Philip, & Languet, Hubert.

r 92 S569s

Correspondence of Philip Sidney and Hubert Languet; ed. by W. A. Bradley. 1912. Merrymount Press. (Humanists' library.)

"Bibliographical note," p.229-230.

"Sidney first met the Burgundian at Frankfort in 1572, when Sidney, just out of Oxford, was a youth of eighteen and Languet was fifty-four. The correspondence was continued with fair regularity until the elder man died, eight years later. It is a lasting monument to both, but is of special interest for what it reveals of Sidney's extraordinary capacity for knowledge developed at an early age." Nation, 1913.

Wagner, Richard.

Story of Bayreuth as told in the Bayreuth letters of Richard Wagner; tr. and ed. by C. V. Kerr. 1912. Small.

The details of the "Bayreuth festival idea" from its planning to its execution are told in this volume, the body of which consists of the letters written by Wagner to his four principal helpers, Feustel, Heckel, Carl Brandt and Theodore Muncker, burgo-master of Bayreuth. The letters are interesting, not only as illustrating Wagner's infinite patience in the attention to details, but as throwing light on the musical situation in general at that time. The narrative is carried on beyond the Nibelung festival to the first performance of Parsifal, in 1882, and is followed by interesting extracts from the reminiscences of Winkelmann, Wolzogen and others. Condensed from Nation, 1912.

The Life of the Spider

By J. Henri Fabre

"The Nature-study of a Darwin or a Mendel is widely separated from that of a simple naturalist, whose researches are bounded by the actual facts he discovers. But as there are giants of natural science so there may be giants among the naturalists. Of the latter the greatest living example—perhaps the greatest who has ever lived—is J. Henri Fabre, who, after long years of unmerited neglect, is at last winning his way to the world-wide recognition that is his due, for he is indeed a very prince of Nature-students. Infinitely patient and infinitely observant, he has a gift of literary expression as clear as it is distinguished. His books are unadorned statements of fact, but so graceful are these statements and so wonderful the facts that his works have an interest not to be surpassed by romance. Of his books published in English, the latest is The Life of the Spider, in which his rare qualities are exhibited at their best.

So far as his own field of observation is concerned, M. Fabre seems to us to be absolutely faultless. The beauty of his style is combined with—indeed we may say it springs from—an austerity of mind that rejects everything but the truth. We are given the life-stories of several spiders, but never once do we find M. Fabre humanising the spider. There are naturalists of no mean capacity who, whenever they attempt to describe an animal's private life, at once begin to translate that life in terms of human thought and, for the sake of the spurious picturesqueness of such a method, vitiate the truth to such an extent that the whole story becomes as incredible as the tales of Uncle Remus. But when we pass with M. Fabre from the familiar world of reason to the unfamiliar world of pure instinct, there is no paltering with the truth. Tempting fact after tempting fact that, untested, might lead us to suppose that the spider reasons, are opposed to other facts that disprove the suggestion utterly...

Not content with observation in the field or the garden, M. Fabre studies his spiders in captivity—a captivity so cleverly arranged that the captive continues her (it is invariably a female) life-work under the eye of the naturalist. Here the Tarantula builds her observatory of more varied materials than she is ever likely to find in her natural habitat; and here the young Epeira are encouraged to demonstrate the mode of their dispersal into the world on the aeroplanes of their own contriving. The book is a veritable romance of the arthropoda, and M. Fabre is rightly called, as M. Maeterlinck calls him, 'the insect's Homer.'" Outlook (London), 1912.

A Christmas Garland

By Max Beerbohm

"This little book, in which [Max Beerbohm] has collected some dozen and a half of literary studies in the manner of his contemporaries, is, like all his works, a fine study in the medium which he has set himself to use. It is very light, but it is not trivial, nor does it leave behind it that rather disagreeable emptiness which a collection of parodies usually leaves, where the care taken with the manner has been utterly disproportioned to the matter. The substance of most of these parodies would in itself be worth reading, in whatever style it had been expressed. He has not so much copied his models as extended them. He has projected the mind of each writer into a theme of his own invention, and, but for the subtle touches of exaggeration, and an occasional reduction of the method to absurdity, he has written as they would have written.

It is extremely witty and amusing; and it is by far the most serious of the many serious writings of Max. For parody of this kind done with comprehension and high skill is really a kind of literary criticism, and not the least serious and comprehensive kind. He has not only parodied the style of his authors, but their mind also. Their manner of thought, their outlook upon life, and their method of expressing both, have been absorbed by him; and his delicate exaggerations, applied just at the right points, serve to reveal the weaknesses and sometimes even the forces of their methods with a clarity that twice the verbiage of mere critical analysis would never have achieved. It is as though, instead of elaborately describing the clothes worn by his subjects, Max had himself put on each suit in turn, strutted or lounged awhile in the manner of each, and spoken thoughts like theirs in a telling imitation of their tones. And behind these solemn parodies of Kipling, Henry James, Wells, Meredith and so forth lurks the shadow of Max himself, making it quite plain to you in what estimation each is held and mocking with a merciful humour the mannerisms of them all. The essays are much less severe than are his caricatures of people drawn with a pencil; in his drawings his method is chiefly to expose; in the literary caricatures a kindly cloak of humour is thrown over the victims, whom he sometimes flatters subtly by expressing their individuality in a higher power than they can achieve. I doubt, for example, if Mr. George Moore could have written his essay on Dickens as well as Max has written it, or if Mr. Arnold Bennett realises his own style so clearly as Max has realised it in 'Struts.'" Saturday review, 1912.

George Gissing

By Frank Swinnerton

"The figure of Gissing is rather like a shadow in our literature: strange because in the Victorian epoch he was the pioneer of what may be called realism in our fiction; strange, too, because so little is known about him. Mr. Swinnerton, however, is to be congratulated. His is certainly the best critical estimate of the man that has appeared, and the most reliable biography, though the real one has certainly yet to be written by Gissing's lifelong pal and co-writer, Morley Roberts. The author has shown a highly capable discrimination. He has honestly sought to re-create the lonely pessimist who delighted in the sorrows and sufferings of the nether world, and he has been successful. It was not an easy job either, owing to the legend surrounding the subject and the difficulty of getting at, still more of revealing, the real facts which, in themselves, would make a novel rivalled only by a work of Strindberg, with whom, notably in his attitude towards women, Gissing was curiously alike.

Critically, Mr. Swinnerton has wiped the slate. The truth is—and Mr. Swinnerton has grasped the fact—that Gissing was by nature and predilection a recluse, a scholar, whose interests lay in the classical times of Greece and Rome. He became a writer by stress of circumstance—a novel-writer, that is. His imagination was poor. His gift lay chiefly in analysis, in exposition, not in artistic re-creation; moreover, though, by industry and natural taste, he learnt to write fine English, it was only as the result of hard work, as his early novels (in some ways the best) show in the most palpable way; for they are written so crudely as to appear almost the work of an uneducated man. It is one of the omissions in the work that Mr. Swinnerton has not pointed this out. Again, it was not Balzac who inspired Gissing, as H. G. Wells has said, but Turgenev, and later Dostoevsky. The idea that Gissing set out to rival Balzac, is pure fiction. Gissing never read much French till his name was made, and he went to live at St. Jean de Luz. Mr. Swinnerton has well shown that Gissing's best books were those of temperament, when he felt personally, when he let himself go. He was always a laborious writer, and often in despair to find types; indeed, his characters were so limited that they occur again and again in his works... The author's tribute to Gissing's work on Dickens is generous and just. Dickens was Gissing's bible—and largely because of the vitality and exaggeration of the types which were so temperamentally alien to his own attitude and power of creation. As said already, this is a good piece of work, a brave and penetrating criticism, and it is so because Mr. Swinnerton has brought to bear upon his matter the only true and valuable qualities of criticism—disinterestedness of motive with the honesty of professional acumen, knowledge, and judgment." English review, 1912.

Thomas Hardy; a Critical Study

By Lancelles Abercrombie

"Mr. Abercrombie is one of those rare authors who combine the imaginative spirit of the poet with the faculty of exact philosophical thinking. Such a union of qualities we believe to be essential to the making of the most considerable poetry; it is unquestionably essential to the highest order of criticism..."

The value of his critical study of Mr. Hardy is that he has subjected the work of this author to the test, not merely of acceptable fiction, but also of art in the complete sense of the term. He has demanded of fiction that, if it is to be one of the great and finally satisfying forms of art, it must fulfil the conditions which are laid down in the greatest examples of poetry, sculpture, and drama. He has selected Mr. Hardy as his subject because he holds that he does satisfy these conditions; that, without being the most fertile and talented of English novelists, he is pre-eminent among them in making his fiction, and his work as a whole, conformable to the type of great imaginative art; and that he has used fiction for something more than 'a wholesome and laudable amusement,' designing it to be 'a notable increase of power in man's endeavour for consciously delighted life'...

Mr. Abercrombie has approached his subject in an exceptionally interesting manner. His analysis of Mr. Hardy's methods is illuminating; his division of his best novels into dramatic and epic is discriminating; his apparently fanciful argument concerning an architectural scheme into which the works fit will bear examination—it proves fruitful. Indeed, this is far the most critical and appreciative study that has yet been made of Mr. Hardy's contribution to literature, and we say that without forgetting Lionel Johnson and others who have written on the subject." Athenaeum, 1912.

Problems of the Pacific. 1912. Williams.

Contents: The ocean of the future.—Russia in the Pacific.—The rise of Japan.—China and the teeming millions of Asia.—The United States, an imperial power.—Great Britain's entry into the Pacific.—The British continent in the Pacific.—New Zealand and the smaller British Pacific colonies.—The native races.—Latin America.—Canada and the Pacific.—The navies of the Pacific.—The armies of the Pacific.—Treaties in the Pacific.—The Panama canal.—The industrial position in the Pacific.—Some strategical considerations.—The rivals.

Mr Fox writes as an Australian to whom the Pacific is the ocean of the future, the cock-pit of coming international rivalries in trade and war, the arena to decide the supremacy of the world. He examines the present factors in the situation and forecasts their developments. He thinks that the future of the Pacific is with the white races and that the real rivalry for its dominance lies between the British empire and the United States. Condensed from Spectator, 1912.

Arblay, Mme Frances (Burney) d'.

92 A665hi

Hill, Constance. Fanny Burney at the court of Queen Charlotte. 1912. Lane.

This book, which covers the period from 1786 to 1791, links the two volumes, "The house in St. Martin's street" and "Juniper hall" and thus completes the greater portion of Fanny Burney's life story. It is based almost entirely upon her diaries and letters, written while she was still at court, and addressed to her relatives or other intimates. These diaries and letters are valuable as a record of the life of the writer during the period which they cover; but they are possibly even more valuable for the delightful picture they give of the life of the royal family. Condensed from Academy, 1913.

r 92 E923b

Barthez, Antoine Charles Ernest. Empress Eugénie and her circle; tr. by Bernard Miall. 1912. Unwin.

"Dr. Barthez was physician to the infant Prince Imperial, and wrote a number of letters from the Villa Eugénie at Biarritz, to his family, during a space of nine years. There is in them nothing more, nor less, than a pleasant and shrewd picture of the family life of Napoleon and Eugénie, extolling their domestic virtues rather than proving their happiness. The character of Dr. Barthez himself is the most delightful thing in the book, which is well translated and illustrated." English review, 1912.

Brought up on the plains, educated at Hampton, Andover and Harvard, he fitted himself for ethnological work among his Indian ancestors. In 1907 he was sent by the Field Museum of Natural History to the Philippines to study the Negritos and in 1909 was murdered by a band of Ilongots.

Maury, Matthew Fontaine, 1806-73.

92 M499c

Corbin, Mrs Diana Fontaine (Maury), comp. Life of Matthew Fontaine Maury; comp. by his daughter. 1888. Low.

Maury was an American naval officer and hydrographer. Appointed to the Naval Observatory and Hydrographic office in Washington, he made a study of old ships' logs, the result of which was a series of wind and current charts that were of incalculable benefit to navigators. On the outbreak of the Civil war he cast in his lot with the South and entered the service of the Confederate States navy.

Michael Angelo.

92 M663r

Rolland, Romain. Life of Michael Angelo; tr. from the French by Frederic Lees. 1912. Heinemann.

Contains also Poems by Michael Angelo.

"Bibliography," p.192-196.

"Less a biography than a series of essays on the artist's personality, which is a congenial study for M. Rolland's imaginative and sympathetic mind. Against the picturesque background of sixteenth-century Florence he draws a striking picture of conflict between the artist's heroic genius and his unheroic will, his wild enthusiasms and gloomy pessimism. Occasionally the reader feels that the note of tragedy is forced to the point of sensationalism... Admirable photographs." A. L. A. booklist, 1913.

Nelson, Admiral Horatio.

92 N222w

Wheeler, Harold Felix Baker. The boys' Nelson. [1912.] Crowell.

Though written for boys the interest of this biography is not confined to young readers. Nelson's career is followed in detail and treated with fairness, though the author's attitude is that of warm admiration.

Smith, William Robertson.

92 S6644b

Black, John Sutherland, & Chrystal, G. W. Life of William Robertson Smith. 1912. Black.

"Large space in this life of the scholarly Cambridge professor and author is given to the heresy trial based on his articles on biblical criticism written for the Encyclopædia Britannica, which resulted in his deposition from his professorship in Free Church College, Aberdeen. His later successful career as professor, and for a time librarian, at Cambridge is followed in detail." A. L. A. booklist, 1912.

Suttner, Bertha (Kinsky), baronin von.

92 S967s

Memoirs of Bertha von Suttner; the records of an eventful life; authorized translation. 2v. 1910. Ginn.

Published for the International School of Peace.

"In addition to being a history of the peace movement, in which she has been so powerful a factor from 1887 to 1908 and of the many peace conferences which [she]... has attended, these interesting memoirs contain letters from Nobel, Tolstoi, Sienkiewicz, Björnson, Jules Simon, and many other noted persons. The author's account of her girlhood reads like a novel, culminating in a most romantic marriage and many years of ideally happy wedded life." A. L. A. booklist, 1911.

Towne, Laura Matilda.

92 T662t

Letters and diary of Laura M. Towne; written from the Sea islands of South Carolina, 1862-1884; ed. by R. S. Holland. 1912. Privately printed.

Miss Towne (1825-1901) devoted 38 years of her life to the colored people of St. Helena Island and employed her means in their education and care.

Rules for Lending Books.

1. Hours. The adult Lending Rooms of the Central and branch libraries are open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., Sundays and holidays excepted. The Childrens Rooms are closed during school hours. (See Schedule of Library hours.)

2. Borrowers. Any resident or taxpayer of Pittsburgh is entitled to borrow books from the Library by signing the proper application and agreement and receiving a borrower's card. In the case of a child under fourteen years of age the application must also be signed by the parent or guardian.

Non-residents may borrow books on payment of one dollar a year in advance. If employed or attending school in the city the guarantee of a resident will be accepted instead of this fee.

Temporary residents may borrow books on making a deposit of five dollars, or more if deemed desirable, this sum to be returned to the depositor upon surrender of his borrower's card.

3. Borrowers' cards. A borrower's card may be used at the Central and branch libraries.

Each borrower is responsible for all books charged on his card.

Change of residence must be reported immediately.

Lost cards should be reported at once. Adult cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of such loss. Juvenile cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of loss is given upon the payment of a fine of five cents, or replaced without payment six months after notice of loss is given.

4. Issue of books. Holders of adult cards may borrow as many books of non-fiction as are needed at one time, together with two books of fiction, only one of which shall have been published within the current or the preceding year. Holders of juvenile cards may borrow two juvenile books at one time.

Books may be kept two weeks, except some new and popular books, which may be kept but seven days. Magazines are lent for seven days only.

5. Renewals. Non-fiction and certain standard fiction may be once renewed for two weeks from the date on which the request for renewal is received.

Other fiction, magazines and seven-day books are not renewable.

Requests for renewal may be made in person, by mail, or by telephone. In each case the call number of the book, the number of the borrower's card, and the date on which the book is due must be given.

In return the borrower will receive a renewal card, which must be brought with the book when it is returned.

6. Reserves. Books may be reserved at the Library by payment of one cent for a postal card notice. As soon as the book is returned to the Library, this postal card will be mailed to the person making the request, and the book will be reserved two days. Requests for reserves may be made by telephone, in which case the cost of the postal card will be collected when the borrower calls for the book.

7. Fines. A fine of two cents a day (including Sundays and holidays) must be paid on each book kept overtime. The holder of a juvenile card may forfeit the use of his card for six months from the date upon which an overdue book is returned in place of payment of this fine. If a book is not returned within three weeks after the date on which it is due, a messenger will be sent for it. This messenger has authority to collect the fine incurred and an additional fee of twenty-five cents for messenger service.

A borrower must pay for books lost or injured while charged on his card. No books may be borrowed until fines and claims for damages have been paid.

No claim can be established because of the failure of the Post Office to deliver notices to or from the Library.

The Library Closed on Memorial Day

The Central Library and the branch libraries will be closed all day on Memorial Day, Friday, May 30.

Vacation Books

Regular borrowers who wish to take books out of town for the summer may obtain special privileges.

Not more than ten books may be issued on one card. Four of these may be fiction.

Books will be stamped due October 1, 1913, from which date a fine of two cents a day will accrue on each.

They may be exchanged at any time. Transportation on all books returned to the Library must be prepaid and those sent out will be sent by express collect.

Borrowers will be asked to give their out of town addresses and their cards will be held at the Library.

Books Which May Not be Borrowed in this Way

Baedeker's Handbooks.

Books added to Library since June 1, 1912.

The Library reserves the right to refuse to lend by this method any other books which it seems unwise to take out of general circulation for so long a time.

Vocational Guidance

A Reading List for Teachers, Parents and Pupils

This list has been compiled by the Reference Department to meet the needs of those interested in the newly organized department of vocational guidance in the Pittsburgh city schools. It includes only the most useful and readable books and does not give references to magazines. Any one wishing to pursue the subject further will find in the Library many books and magazine articles on vocational guidance which are not mentioned here.

The list is in two parts. The first, intended for the use of the teacher, covers books on vocational guidance in general, and on the closely related topics of vocational and industrial education. The second part, intended especially for the pupil, though probably helpful to parent and teacher as well, covers inspirational books and books giving information and advice on specific occupations.

Many of the books are in the branch libraries and all except those marked r may be obtained through the branches from the Central Library.

Reviews of Recent Books

Our Vanishing Wild Life

By William T. Hornaday

"The masterful summary, in William T. Hornaday's 'Our Vanishing Wild Life,' of the destruction of wild life now going on, has appeared just at the critical moment. It was barely published when the weight of its logic and facts did much to help the Lacy bill to pass, whereby all migrating birds are protected. By a large array of statistics, Dr. Hornaday has shown how necessary it is that a beginning be made at once to conserve the wild creatures which are left to us. Hardly a page is without a moral drawn from past experience. We read of the scoffed-at bill proposed in 1857 to protect the passenger pigeon, and on the same page is a photograph of the single survivor of this species; we read of the fearful ravages wrought by introduced noxious birds and animals in islands, and of the birds which mankind has completely blotted out. Much space is given to others which are on the verge of extinction. The difficult problem of latitude and races is discussed in full; how the Southern negro profits gastronomically by the protection of birds which nest in the North, and the parallel case of the avivorous Italians in south Europe. The old tragedy of the albatrosses of Laysan is vividly told, and it is predicted that the unprotected big game of East Africa will possibly last fifteen years at the present rate of slaughter. Ten years ago the annual loss to American crops due to insects was estimated at nearly $800,000,000, and yet we go on indiscriminately shooting the birds which alone can remedy this. When one reads of the seeds of one hundred and twenty-nine species of noxious weeds which are eaten by the bob-white and is informed that a single bird will eat as many as fourteen hundred beggar ticks and thirty thousand seeds of the rabbit's-foot clover, one begins to understand the value of birds to mankind." Nation, 1913.

The Story of My Boyhood and Youth

By John Muir

"John Muir's account of his early years, printed serially in the Atlantic Monthly, has now been published in book form. It is a notable piece of autobiographic writing—the story of an unusually interesting boyhood and youth told with an energy and an eye for the diverting and significant that distinguish it at once from the slipshod garrulity of most books of the kind. One may open the volume at any page and be confident of striking either a passage of extraordinarily vivid description or an entertaining episode that closes with a curious solemnizing effect...

The first fifty pages are devoted to the author's boyhood in Dunbar, beside the North Sea—the discipline of his simple life at home, under the eye and the switch of a sober, 'all-Bible' father; his learning by heart the entire New Testament and three-fourths of the Old; his lessons in self-reliance through daily and more than daily fist fights; his precious holidays in the country, listening to the skylarks and running ten or twenty miles at a stretch...

At the age of eleven he accompanied the family 'to the wonderful schoolless, bookless American wilderness'... They settled a dozen miles from Portage, before a lily-rimmed pond which they named Fountain Lake, and here, by dint of an extraordinary energy even exceeding that characteristic of immigrants, had soon established a prosperous farm. Eight years later they moved to a larger tract of land in the neighborhood and the relentless labor began once more; 'even when sick we were held to our task as long as we could stand.' Yet these were the happiest of days. The chapters that form the bulk of the volume (A New World, Life on a Wisconsin Farm, A Paradise of Birds, Young Hunters, The Ploughboy), describe with a twofold enthusiasm, that of the impressionable boy and of the venerable man looking into the past, the joys of those early days in a strange land." Nation, 1913.

The Masters of Modern French Criticism

By Irving Babbitt

"This volume is primarily a study of the French critics of the last century. Some half-dozen of the leading figures are very fully portrayed, and a number of minor ones are sketched into the background. The reader who is specifically interested in the historic development of French criticism will hardly find elsewhere any exposition comparable to this of the whole movement of that criticism during the last hundred years. Still less will he find elsewhere a presentation of the subject through the medium of so admirable a series of portraits. That of Sainte-Beuve, who has not been very fortunate in his critics, will probably impress many a reader as the completest and truest that has yet been done. But least of all will one find elsewhere such a penetrating analysis of the influence of modern criticism for good and evil on literature and on the intellectual welfare of the age.

The critics are made to serve as a starting-point for the discussion of criticism, while criticism itself is interesting to the author chiefly because it holds in solution the main problems of nineteenth-century thought; and these, again, do not so much interest him in themselves (for he sees the century in somewhat cold perspective) as in their relation to the thought of the ages...

Exaggerated homage to this or that current of contemporary thought, or exaggerated revolt from it, has helped to make nineteenth-century criticism as chaotic as it is rich and varied. The same causes have thus produced a confusion of standards in criticism corresponding to the confusion of genres in literature which Mr. Babbitt has already traced in 'The New Laokoon.' He seeks the remedy for this confusion in the reestablishment of a rational hierarchy of standards.

According to Mr. Babbitt's analysis, the two main currents of nineteenth-century thought, the romantic and the scientific, have co-operated in producing this confusion. Romanticism, by its glorification of the spontaneous, of instinct, of temperament, has exalted above the intellect what lies really below the intellect... Science, in its turn, by emphasizing only the external fact, has tended to draw away man's attention from his soul in any sense whatever and to merge him wholly in the phenomena of nature.

The expository side of the book traces the various forms of these two streams of tendency, with their often bewildering cross and counter currents, as revealed in their advocates, their opponents—and their victims. The polemic side of the book analyzes, with no sparing of epigram, their mischievous inconsistencies and contradictions when tried by that final test of literature, confrontation with life. The constructive side is represented by a highly serious attempt to mediate between the old idealism and these modern elements, which it had too much ignored and which in their turn have too much ignored it." Nation, 1913.

A Survey of English Literature, 1780-1830

By Oliver Elton

"Probably no period in English literature was charged with such important consequences as that which Professor Elton has selected as the subject of these volumes. England was slowly awaking from an intellectual torpor which had benumbed the national imagination and frozen the national fancy for close upon fifty years. New ideals were in process of formation. The hard crust of classicism was giving way before the warmth of a humanitarian sentiment which was to find its ultimate expression—though in varying forms—in the poetry of Wordsworth and of Shelley. Collins had already sounded—however faintly—the trumpet of revolt, and the process of emancipation was carried a stage further by Cowper. Crabbe, 'a Pope in worsted stockings,' had opened up a new realm for poetry in the lives of humble people, and his successors, while they discarded his diction, were careful to retain much of his sentiment. Blake piped down the valleys wild to an unheeding generation. In Scotland an inspired ploughman was enriching the language of his country with the sweetest lyrics that it had ever known, while Sir Walter Scott brought back to English literature the breath of that older romance which had filled the Middle Ages with mystery and colour.

The French Revolution, which set thrones a-tottering throughout Europe, left its permanent impress alike upon English life and English literature. It was in vain for Edmund Burke, the last of the Whigs and the first of the Conservatives, to attempt to stem with his lofty and impassioned rhetoric the incoming tide of democracy. The world—or so men felt—was being re-created. Shelley appeared as the herald of a new dawn, and Byron—that Titanic figure—his head in the clouds and his feet planted firmly on the earth, flaunted through Europe 'the pageant of his bleeding heart.' The fight between the old classical tradition and that new spirit which has been so happily termed 'the renaissance of wonder,' raged fiercely for a space, flickered down, and died. The victory lay with the moderns.

To write the literary history of such a period is a task almost superhuman in its magnitude. It is not, indeed, the task of any one man, be he never so gifted. Professor Elton applies himself to a work at once more modest and more effective. 'The book,' he writes, 'is really a review, a direct criticism, of everything I can find in the history of fifty years that speaks to me with any sound of human voice.' As such it must be judged, and as such—if we mistake not—it will be held to be the most entirely satisfactory contribution to this vast and perennially interesting subject that has yet appeared.

Necessarily the personal equation plays a considerable part in these appreciations and criticisms. There are writers for whom Professor Elton professes a warm-hearted admiration, while others, of equal eminence, leave him dispassionately critical. But his judgments are always sane and well-balanced. His enthusiasms stop short of idolatry, and he is capable of a condemnation that is wholly devoid of rancour. On every page, almost, we encounter the right thing rightly said...

No student of modern English literature and poetry can afford to neglect these volumes. The work wanted doing, and Professor Elton has done it admirably. In all the nine hundred odd pages there is not a superfluous sentence. The author is entitled to our gratitude and our thanks." Academy, 1913.

Immigration and labor; the economic aspects of European immigration to the United States. 1912. Putnam.

The object of the book is to refute the finding of the Immigration commission in 1910, that European immigration should be restricted in the interest of the American laboring class. Among the leading points which the author seeks to establish in opposition to the contentions of the commission are the following: recent immigration has not increased unemployment, nor displaced native Americans in industry, nor provoked an increase of race suicide, nor set up inferior standards of living, nor underbid the native workers, nor prevented the reduction of the work day, nor hindered labor organization, nor given us our present labor problem.

820.9 E56

Survey of English literature, 1780-1830. 2v. 1912. Arnold.

"The book,' [Professor Elton] writes, 'is really a review, a direct criticism, of everything I can find in the history of fifty years that speaks to me with any sound of living voice.' As such it must be judged, and as such—if we mistake not—it will be held to be the most entirely satisfactory contribution to this vast and perennially interesting subject that has yet appeared. Necessarily the personal equation plays a considerable part in these appreciations and criticisms... But his judgments are always sane and well-balanced." Academy, 1912.

Clark, Francis Edward.

914.36 C52

Old homes of new Americans; the country and the people of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy and their contribution to the New World. 1913. Houghton.

First-hand study of the old homes of some of our foreign born citizens. The author writes sympathetically of Slavs and Magyars in their native surroundings and maintains their desirability as United States citizens. His book helps much toward an understanding of the complex dual monarchy from which so large a part of our immigrant stream flows.

Headlam, Cecil.

914.4 H38

Provence and Languedoc. [1912.] Methuen.

"The physical geography, architecture, people and romantic history of that part of Provence and Languedoc which lies about the valley of the Rhone and its mouth, as well as the country to the west, are very appreciatively set forth in this rather extensive volume. To one who knows the region or is fairly conversant with its history and literature, it will be pleasant reading. The sixteen photographic reproductions are attractive." A. L. A. booklist, 1913.

Rambles in the Pyrenees and the adjacent districts, Gascony, Pays de Foix & Roussillon. 1912. Murray.

"The amiable word 'ramble' does not suggest the thoroughness with which Mr. Jackson has gone over the districts lying on the French side of the Pyrenees, districts rich in history and in legend, and happily still rich in a splendid architecture bequeathed to us by the past. The descriptions of the country and the people...are good, but the description of the churches, castles, arcades, fountains, and so on are excellent; full of detail but never dull...The illustrations are numerous, and...uniformly clear and well chosen." Outlook (London), 1912.

The night of fires, and other Breton studies; put into English by F. M. Gostling. 1912. Chapman.

Other studies: The child of the Yeun.—The night of the dead.—A summer funeral.—Easter in Iceland.

"These Breton sketches are touched by a strange and twilight charm which is all their own, and which probably arises in great part from the effect of absolute sincerity. The writer is telling of a life he knows...and he tells of it with the simplicity of a peasant and the fine discrimination of an artist...The Brittany of which M. le Braz writes is a country of fast vanishing primitive faiths and customs." Outlook (London), 1912.

Things seen in Russia. 1913. Dutton.

"The author...writes with authority, having spent more than twenty years in Russia, both in city and country life. There is no trace of the hackneyed language of the guide-book in any of his chapters—he tells simply and with well-chosen language of the life of the people, their joys and sorrows, their songs and holidays; of the great cities, St. Petersburg and Moscow, and their official and social ways and manners." Academy, 1913.

Excellently illustrated.

Bell, Mrs Margaret Van Horn (Dwight).

917.48 B41

Journey to Ohio in 1810 as recorded in the journal of Margaret Van Horn Dwight; ed. with an introduction by Max Farrand. 1913. Yale University Press. (Yale historical manuscripts.)

The writer was a girl of 20, a great granddaughter of Jonathan Edwards and a niece of Timothy Dwight, of Yale. She traveled by wagon from New Haven to Warren, Ohio and wrote frankly and naively of her experiences along the way—the greater part of which lay through Pennsylvania.

Contents: Historical sketch.—Brazil.—Argentina.—Uruguay.—Paraguay.—Bolivia.—Chile.—Peru.—Ecuador.—Colombia.—Venezuela.—The Guianas.

"Bibliography," p.429-431.

"Mr. Van Dyke's book is a general survey, and is valuable first of all to the reader who wants to get a broad view of present conditions. In the second place, the reader who wants to know about some one country in particular will find that country described in as much detail as is possible as to scenery, cities, people, social life, industry, commercial and economic aspects. In the third place, the business man with an eye to South American trade should find this a volume to his taste, for in it Mr. Van Dyke lays stress on the commercial relations between the two Americas." Outlook, 1913.

949.6 G36

Adventures of war with cross and crescent. [1912.] Methuen.

Mr Gibbs represented the "Graphic" on the Bulgarian side and Mr Grant, the "Daily mirror" on the Turkish side in the Balkan war. Their book does not pretend to be a complete history of the war. It is rather a record of personal experiences. Mr Gibbs's narrative is largely the tale of preparation and organization for the war. Mr Grant actually witnessed the Turkish retreat from Lule Burgas and was at Tchatalja at the height of the cholera epidemic. The book is well illustrated.

Individual Biography

Dickens, Charles.

92 D551ki

Kitton, Frederic George. The Dickens country. 1911. Black. (Pilgrimage series.)

Tells in brief the biography of the novelist, tracing him from home to home, from the earliest days at Landport, where he was born, to the latest at Gad's Hill, where he died. As each place is mentioned, the author tells what part it played in Dickens's stories. In dealing with London, Mr Kitton has practically confined himself to those buildings and quarters of the town with which Dickens was personally connected, leaving untouched the many places which are described in the novels yet which formed no part of Dickens's recorded life. Condensed from Academy, 1905.

Hyndman, Henry Mayers.

92 H997hy

Further reminiscences. 1912. Macmillan.

No less interesting though somewhat more controversial than his first volume of reminiscences. The matters with which he deals, dating from 1889 onwards, are still "live portions of himself," and his judgments of men are extremely frank.

Muir, John.

92 M953m

The story of my boyhood and youth. 1913. Houghton.

A notable piece of autobiographic writing—the story of an unusually interesting boyhood and youth told with an energy and an eye for the diverting and significant that distinguish it at once from the slipshod garrulity of most books of the kind. The first 50 pages are devoted to the author's boyhood in Dunbar, beside the North sea. At the age of 11 he accompanied his family to Wisconsin, and the chapters that form the bulk of the volume describe the joys of those early days in a new land. Condensed from Nation, 1913.

Books for the Blind

The Library has a collection of about 1,400 books for the blind. The Pennsylvania Home Teaching Society and Free Circulating Library for the Blind supports in this district a teacher, herself totally blind, who, under the direction of this Library, visits the adult blind in their homes and teaches them to read. This service and the use of the books are absolutely free to all the adult blind in and near Pittsburgh, and the Librarian requests that names and addresses of such persons be sent to him in order that the teacher may call upon them.

Rules for Lending Books

1. Hours. The adult Lending Rooms of the Central and branch libraries are open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., Sundays and holidays excepted. The Childrens Rooms are closed during school hours. (See Schedule of Library hours.)

2. Borrowers. Any resident or taxpayer of Pittsburgh is entitled to borrow books from the Library by signing the proper application and agreement and receiving a borrower's card. In the case of a child under fourteen years of age the application must also be signed by the parent or guardian.

Non-residents may borrow books on payment of one dollar a year in advance. If employed or attending school in the city the guarantee of a resident will be accepted instead of this fee.

Temporary residents may borrow books on making a deposit of five dollars, or more if deemed desirable, this sum to be returned to the depositor upon surrender of his borrower's card.

3. Borrowers' cards. A borrower's card may be used at the Central and branch libraries.

Each borrower is responsible for all books charged on his card.

Change of residence must be reported immediately.

Lost cards should be reported at once. Adult cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of such loss. Juvenile cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of loss is given upon the payment of a fine of five cents, or replaced without payment six months after notice of loss is given.

4. Issue of books. Holders of adult cards may borrow as many books of non-fiction as are needed at one time, together with two books of fiction, only one of which shall have been published within the current or the preceding year. Holders of juvenile cards may borrow two juvenile books at one time.

Books may be kept two weeks, except some new and popular books, which may be kept but seven days. Magazines are lent for seven days only.

5. Renewals. Non-fiction and certain standard fiction may be once renewed for two weeks from the date on which the request for renewal is received.

Other fiction, magazines and seven-day books are not renewable.

Requests for renewal may be made in person, by mail, or by telephone. In each case the call number of the book, the number of the borrower's card, and the date on which the book is due must be given.

In return the borrower will receive a renewal card, which must be brought with the book when it is returned.

6. Reserves. Books may be reserved at the Library by payment of one cent for a postal card notice. As soon as the book is returned to the Library, this postal card will be mailed to the person making the request, and the book will be reserved two days. Requests for reserves may be made by telephone, in which case the cost of the postal card will be collected when the borrower calls for the book.

7. Fines. A fine of two cents a day (including Sundays and holidays) must be paid on each book kept overtime. The holder of a juvenile card may forfeit the use of his card for six months from the date upon which an overdue book is returned in place of payment of this fine. If a book is not returned within three weeks after the date on which it is due, a messenger will be sent for it. This messenger has authority to collect the fine incurred and an additional fee of twenty-five cents for messenger service.

A borrower must pay for books lost or injured while charged on his card. No books may be borrowed until fines and claims for damages have been paid.

No claim can be established because of the failure of the Post Office to deliver notices to or from the Library.

Publications of the Library Now in Print

The Library Closed on July 4

The Central Library and the branch libraries will be closed all day on Friday, July 4.

Reading List on Vocational Guidance

The Library has just issued in separate form the reading list on "Vocational guidance" which appeared in last month's Bulletin. The list was compiled by the Reference Department to meet the needs of those interested in the newly organized Department of Vocational Guidance in the Pittsburgh city schools. It is a selected list, including only the most useful and readable books and omitting all references to magazine articles. The list is in two parts, the first intended for the use of the teacher or parent, the second primarily for the children. It may be obtained free at the Library, or will be sent post-paid for five cents.

Vacation Books

Regular borrowers who wish to take books out of town for the summer may obtain special privileges.

Not more than ten books may be issued on one card. Four of these may be fiction.

Books will be stamped due October 1, 1913, from which date a fine of two cents a day will accrue on each.

They may be exchanged at any time. Transportation on all books returned to the Library must be prepaid and those sent out will be sent by express collect.

Borrowers will be asked to give their out of town addresses and their cards will be held at the Library.

Books Which May Not be Borrowed in this Way

Baedeker's Handbooks.

Books added to the Library since June 1, 1912.

The Library reserves the right to refuse to lend by this method any other books which it seems unwise to take out of general circulation for so long a time.

Reviews of Recent Books

A Small Boy and Others

By Henry James

"This wonderful record of the author's own childhood is a masterpiece of literary art, and if Mr. Henry James had no other claim to our esteem than this one book we should still rank him high among those writers from whom we have derived the purest delight, not only from the nature of the work accomplished, but also for the consummate craftsmanship that has gone to its accomplishment. Through the memory of his mind as child and boy he has resuscitated for us a bygone world, the simpler and perhaps kindlier world that we often speak of with vague disparagement and ill-defined contempt as Early Victorian. The most vital part of the world thus reconstructed for our benefit is American; but it is an America far less alien to us than the America of to-day. Indeed, as we read, we are at times deluded into the belief that we are discovering some pleasant English family of the professional class, with literary and artistic leanings and a distinct social sense, living in an early Victorian environment somewhere in the outskirts of London—a younger generation of the people whom Miss Austen has immortalised. There is talk of business where fortunes have been comfortably amassed, but it is in the background, and all we are concerned with are social values and family amenities. Had this reconstruction been all, it would yet have been much; but its interest is heightened for us by the fact that it is the world of a child, with wistful touches that recall not only the past, but the child in us all, that found, and, if we happily have not forgotten, still finds, that past wonderful. With all the loving care of the great Dutch painters, but also with the swift inevitable strokes of the later impressionist, Mr. James has given us a series of interiors, street scenes, and portraits that can never be forgotten. In the long-drawn-out sentences, in which it is the amazing parentheses that count, that are so difficult to read yet so immensely worth reading, the thoughts of the child are cunningly and irrevocably fixed...

The child Henry James is a pensive child in a bustling and active, but simple and unsophisticated world, a looker-on and recorder of life; and the record rings true. A large family circle provides a gallery of portraits, the unconscious sitters for which, being faithfully portrayed in their habit of dress and mind as they lived, from the immensely old Great-aunt Wyckoff to the vaguely precise and primly attenuated 'Uncle' ... Then we have pictures of vanished New York, wonderful shops and schools and museums, and still more wonderful theatres. Distinguished people pass before us, among them Thackeray, who singles out the child for attention on account of his over-buttoned tunic. It is curious, but the fact remains, that as the child grows older the memories seem less vivid: thus the reconstructed Europe of later boyhood is colder and less vital than the New York of earlier days. The book, however, never loses its charm, and to all admirers of Mr. Henry James's work we confidently recommend the book as probably the finest that has come from his accomplished pen." Outlook (London), 1913.

Symbol and Satire in the French Revolution

By Ernest F. Henderson

"It is practically with the death of Robespierre that Mr. Henderson concludes this pictorial record of the French Revolution. The volume opens with the summoning of the States-General in 1789, and by means of nearly two hundred reproductions of contemporary broadsides, allegories, caricatures, cartoons, and satirical sketches arranged chronologically, accompanied by an explanatory narrative, the author carries the reader through all the phases of that wonderful revolution which shook Europe to its foundations. Most of these prints were undoubtedly issued as a means of political propaganda, with the direct and avowed intention of influencing public opinion. They are documents of real historical importance, for they appealed even to the illiterate; and it must be remembered that probably three-fourths of the population of France at that period could neither read nor write. And so cartoons became a strong weapon in the hands of those who had control of the public and other funds, and there is reason to believe that huge sums were spent in producing them. The procès-verbal of the Convention records the statement that such productions 'are one of the most efficacious means of instructing the hamlets and speaking to the eyes of the ignorant and unfortunate inhabitants'; while the accounts of the Committee of Public Safety contain an item of three thousand francs paid to an artist for two caricatures, one of which represents a turkey pulling King George by the nose.

All the principal events of those stirring times receive recognition in one form or another; there are portraits of the leading personages, and naturally the famous sans-culottes figure largely. . .

Mr. Henderson has produced a most interesting . . . volume, which will entertain the general reader, and prove useful to the student of the period." Academy, 1913.

Italy in the Thirteenth Century

By Henry Dwight Sedgwick

"Although Mr. Sedgwick has manifestly much sympathy for the æsthetic aspects of his subject, he treats his subject as an intellectual. He has set himself an encyclopædic task: for he undertakes to describe not merely the political evolution, but the ecclesiastical polity, the theological dogmas, the manners and customs, the architecture, sculpture, painting and poetry, and even the Latin literature of the century; and he has evidently devoted himself with intelligent industry to acquire a knowledge of these diverse themes. His volumes are a guide-book—the best in English—to the period; popular, but not shallow; a series of agreeable and often sprightly essays; a storehouse of quaint or pertinent information.

The work shows plainly that Mr. Sedgwick's forte lies in the essay, or brief monograph, rather than in historical composition. He lacks the architectonic talent without which no man can shine as an historian. He has assembled ample material, but instead of building it into one symmetrical edifice, he puts up a dozen small ones, somewhat artificially connected by porticos. . .

Mr. Sedgwick has obtained variety, but at the expense of much more important qualities. This is to be regretted all the more, because his introductory chapter, the best in the book, and the intrinsic value of much of his material, lead us to expect a higher achievement than we find.

He has furnished an excellent substructure for the career of Innocent III, whom he regards as the greatest political figure in Europe between Charlemagne and Napoleon, and he does full justice to that other masterful Pope, Gregory IX. But in respect to the Emperor Frederick II, 'the Wonder of the World,' he is less satisfactory...

[The chapters on the literature and arts] reveal careful study of the leading authorities, and first-hand impressions as well. They are wholesomely popular, and will be especially useful to travellers. Occasionally, Mr. Sedgwick, after the fashion of most art critics, seems to read into a painting or sculpture more than is warranted...but this does no harm, and often displays ingenuity. He has an enthusiastic account of St. Francis, two companion sketches of Thomas Aquinas and Bonaventure, and an entertaining description of mediæval manners and customs...

On the whole, his work ought to commend itself to cultivated readers. It is not so good for its epoch as Symonds is for the Renaissance, but it is the best in its field in English...The illustrations are well-chosen, but we miss footnote references to the many quotations from mediæval sources." Nation, 1913.

The Personality of Napoleon

By J. Holland Rose

"When a man who knows a great deal about a great subject discloses briefly and charmingly the heart of his subject, his book is likely to be worth reading. This is such a book...These eight lectures are full of new facts and fresh thoughts.

The first seven lectures on Napoleon the Man, the Jacobin, the Warrior, the Lawgiver, the Emperor, the Thinker, and the World-Ruler, flash before the reader the whole career of the man seen from different points of view. This is the novel part of the book and enables Mr. Rose effectively to point out again and again the constant transformation which Napoleon was undergoing in the course of his life...

Most interesting, perhaps, is the lecture on Napoleon the Thinker, in which Mr. Rose traces the evolution of the great man's ideas on religion, superstition, Fortune, and his views on Voltaire and Tacitus...

Why did Napoleon fail? So far as any one formula can be assigned to explain such a complex question, Mr. Rose would say, 'hardening of the brain'...In his earlier years the 'mere dry calculation' of his brain had curbed the impulsiveness of his nature and checked the romantic flight of his fancy. Gradually great success began to impair the inhibitive power of his brain. The passion for the grandiose overmastered the calculating faculties which in early life generally held ambition in leash...From the mistaken invasion of Spain until the reckless false moves at Waterloo, Mr. Rose traces the weakening of Napoleon's earlier power of cool calculation and the increasing mastery of passion and impulse." Nation, 1913.

The Old English Country Squire

By P. H. Ditchfield

"With his volume on 'The Old English Country Squire,' supplementing those already published on the 'Parson' and the 'Parish Clerk,' P. H. Ditchfield completes a pleasant trilogy on English rural life. Mr. Ditchfield, as we know from his previous volumes, is an ardent lover of the subject which he has made his own—the old-fashioned village community of England, happy though feudal, and on the whole well content with existence under the benevolent tyranny of 'the quality.' If he is also somewhat of a special pleader and quite frankly a laudator temporis acti... we need not quarrel with him on that account, for his convictions are those of the squires and parsons about whom he writes, and without them his writing would lose something of its sympathetic quality. But if he has grievances against modern tendencies, he has also humor sufficient to keep them in the background... In these pages the whole history of the English squire is given, from the age of chivalry, when he was the gentleman attendant on a knight, to these less ardent days, when, his warlike guise laid aside, he is simply one of that order, a little lower than the nobility, which, as the author might affirm, is likely before long to be known as 'the landless gentry.' Mr. Ditchfield feels sadly that he is telling the story of a class that is rapidly disappearing, and his serious purpose is to show that, whether the system that created him is now outworn or not, the country squire has played no inglorious part in contributing to the greatness of England and has performed faithfully the work that fell to him to do. The admirable illustrations are an attractive feature of this book." Nation, 1913.

Social Life in Old New Orleans

By Mrs Eliza Ripley

"Since the appearance of George W. Cable's 'Old Creole Days,' in 1879, there has been a persistent interest in New Orleans, and a continued demand for stories, reminiscences, and serious history dealing with the life that was lived there. In many ways this interest has been met, though a second Cable has not arisen to re-work the old vein or discover a new one; and the life of the most European of American cities, at least as it was in its most romantic epoch, still appears to the world just as Cable represented it. Mrs. Eliza Ripley... limits herself to a description of New Orleans society in the narrower sense, and thus her work cannot compare with that of her distinguished predecessor, though it is both interesting and important, even to the serious student of history. There is a certain flavor and directness about the style that is most entertaining, reminding one of the writings of Mrs. Roger Pryor. Mrs. Ripley was a part of the life she deals with, and she loves the people, the ideals, and the antiquities of ante-bellum New Orleans quite as much as the charming Virginian writer loved her 'ancient Dominion'... Mrs. Ripley does not descend to mere eulogy and panegyric, though her love for the queer streets and strange ways of the 'French quarter,' for the unique markets, and the ever-present negro slave, often tempt her near to the border line. She delights to linger at old-fashioned places to reproduce for the reader conversations with long-forgotten people, people 'of quality' whose praises she never tires of singing. Most of the old families of New Orleans, at the time when negro slaves were many and negro manners were obsequious, appear in these chapters—the Beauregards, Kennedys, Slidells, and many others. And the great balls, the elaborate wedding festivals, the whole procession of a luxurious (for that time) and thoroughly self-conscious life, are brought before the reader. Children and their ways, boarding schools, mural decorations for the great houses, steamboats and hotels, plantation life, and the sad tale of war and exile,—all have their place. There are many wood-cuts, engravings, and daguerreotypes to vivify the unconventional narrative." Dial, 1913.

Field Days in California

By Bradford Torrey

"The author of this book, who died at Santa Barbara, California, last October, will long be remembered as the most genial of American writers on nature. Shortly before his death he had prepared for publication what was to prove his final book—a volume of essays dealing mainly with bird-life in California, but including also a chapter on the Grand Cañon and a delightful essay on 'Reading a Check-List.' It is by no means a superfluous addition to Mr. Torrey's work; though inferior to some of his earlier books in firmness of style, it is at the same time clearly superior in vivacity and mellow wisdom. Here is a man who spent his days in bringing his 'twelve-power glass' to bear on birds that most of us have never seen and never shall see, who has related his ornithological experiences, however trivial, with unflagging persistence—admitting few landscapes and fewer human beings—and who has yet contrived to give us entertainment of an unusual quality.

As in the case of Gilbert White's letters, Mr. Torrey's essays derive their chief value from the writer's agreeable personality. 'With a pleasing mixture of humanity and ornithology, which really go well together, a fact that speaks well for both of them,' he takes the reader along a California beach, or under the redwoods, or into the Yosemite, and gossips intimately with an unerring perception of the significant and diverting." Nation, 1913.

California Coast Trails; a Horseback Ride from Mexico to Oregon

By J. Smeaton Chase

"This well-known writer on the Golden State has chosen a favorable opportunity—we may almost say he has taken time by the forelock, in his vivid description of what may still be called 'Old California.' The wild Western features are so rapidly disappearing from this beautiful region and Eastern enterprise and social life are so widely spreading over its cities and villages that in a few years it will have become merged in the safe and stable monotone of the general Union... The material progress, the trade and industry of the country he leaves to other people to discuss, but we have in these chapters the impressions received by a fine mind of a poetic cast which impart to the reader a knowledge of California only second to that to be derived from a personal visit. The book is fully illustrated from the author's photographs, which are excellent. A good index supplies the reader with clues to places which he desires to hear about. There is also a 'Pronouncing Glossary of Spanish Terms and Place-names.'" Literary digest, 1913.

Moore, Charles Herbert. b 726 M87

The mediæval church architecture of England. 1912. Macmillan.

"Its purpose is to set forth the character of mediæval church architecture in England in the light of a structural analysis and comparison with the French Gothic art, and of the conditions and influences under which it was produced." Introduction.

Though the general usefulness of the book is somewhat impaired by the fact that it is a special plea for the superiority of the French structural system, it contains much accurate observation and numerous careful drawings.

Hercules Brabazon Brabazon, 1821-1906; his art and life. 1912. Allen.

Brabazon was an English country gentleman, unsuspicious of his own genius, who at the age of 71 held the first public exhibition of his water-colors and received instant recognition. His sketches are masterpieces of color, as the 24 illustrations admirably reproduced in color for this book, bear witness.

Van Gogh, Vincent.759.9 V189v

Letters of a post-impressionist; the familiar correspondence of Vincent Van Gogh [tr. from the German by A. M. Ludovici]. 1913. Houghton.

The bizarrie of the work of Van Gogh (1853-90), coupled with the fact that he went mad and committed suicide in an asylum, has given easy opportunities for rash denunciations of his pictures as being the products of lunacy and degeneracy. These letters lend no color to that theory. They reveal a man of painstaking habits and almost pedestrian mind. He is seen to be deeply interested in the technical side of his art and to be forever getting assistance from the example of the old masters (especially of the Dutch school), for whom his admiration was unbounded. The letters will hardly be of much interest except to artists. Condensed from Spectator, 1913.

Wedmore, Sir Frederick.759 W41p

Painters and painting. 1912. Holt. (Home university library of modern knowledge.)

"Bibliography," p. 221-222.

Small volume of 220 pages in which a distinguished critic characterizes in a brief and pungent way the work of the most prominent artists of all schools, from Dürer and Holbein to Courbet, Boudin and Manet.

Jones, Henry Arthur.792 J41

Foundations of a national drama; a collection of lectures, essays and speeches, delivered and written in the years 1896-1912 (revised and corrected, with additions). 1913. Chapman.

The last three chapters are devoted to the "Licensing and censorship of plays."

These essays, written during a period of 16 years, express the author's disappointment in the state of English drama and rehearse the handicaps under which it labors. He finds little hope in contemporary drama and the value of his criticism is somewhat lessened by his failure to note encouraging signs of improvement in the work of some of the younger and more thoughtful English playwrights.

The sea and the jungle. 1913. Dutton.

Narrative of the voyage of the tramp steamer Capella from Swansea to Pará, Brazil, and thence 2,000 miles along the forests of the Amazon and Madeira rivers to San Antonio falls; afterwards returning to Barbados and from there by way of Jamaica to Tampa, Florida. Mr Tomlinson describes a real ship, with real sailors, on a very real voyage. In particular, he pictures the terrible jungle of the Brazilian forests, and he intersperses his narrative with many anecdotes.

Readable and very enthusiastic account of scenery and people. Illustrated in color.

Ditchfield, Peter Hampson. 914.2 D63o

The old English country squire. 1912. Methuen.

Mr Ditchfield is an ardent lover of the subject which he has made his own—the old-fashioned village community of England, happy though feudal, and on the whole well content with existence under the benevolent tyranny of "the quality." He writes with zest and sympathy of a rapidly disappearing class, giving the whole history of the English squire from the days of chivalry to the present time. Condensed from Nation, 1913.

Gwynne, Paul. 914.6 G99

Along Spain's river of romance, the Guadalquivir; the lure of the real Spain in Andalusia; its personality, its people and its associations. 1912. McBride.

The author, an Englishman, followed the river from its obscure source in the hills of Cazorla down to its Mediterranean outlet, traveling afoot, by donkey and by boat. His book reflects his many interests—adventure, exploration, archæology, folk-lore, history and literature, and his style is readable.

Little cities of Italy; tr. by Helen Gerard. 1913. Putnam.

"André Maurel," by Helen Gerard, p.5-9.

Starting from Milan, M. Maurel works his way gradually to Rome, visiting on his route some two-score of cities, recording his impressions of each, reviewing their histories with a charming, intimate touch, and appreciating with the acumen of a trained critic as well as with the enthusiasm of a genuine lover of art the treasures that they contain. Condensed from Nation, 1913.

The towns visited are Milan, Pavia, Piacenza, Parma, Modena, Bologna, Ferrara, Ravenna, Rimini, Pesaro, Urbino, Ancona, Perugia, Foligno, Assisi, Spello, Spoleto, Montefalco, Terni, Orvieto and Viterbo.

United States—Travel and description

Chase, Joseph Smeaton. 917.94 C39c

California coast trails; a horseback ride from Mexico to Oregon. 1913. Houghton.

Two horseback journeys are described, one reaching from El Monte to San Diego, the other from El Monte to the Oregon line. The purpose of both journeys was to obtain leisurely views of a country which, it is predicted, will undergo a great transformation through the building of the Panama canal. The author writes enthusiastically, devoting himself almost entirely to the beauties of California scenery. Fully illustrated from the author's photographs.

Lost in the Arctic; the story of the "Alabama" expedition, 1909-1912. 1913. Heinemann.

Contains map.

"Remarkable record of the three years spent in the Arctic region by Captain Mikkelsen, who with a companion was sent to find the papers and diaries of the lost expedition of the ill-fated Erichsen. The story of hardship and endurance and of the long waiting for the relief ship is told with simple directness but with a natural eloquence that makes it one of the most readable of books on polar exploration. Many excellent photographic illustrations and map." A. L. A. booklist, 1913.

Powell, E. Alexander. 916 P87

The last frontier; the white man's war for civilisation in Africa. 1912. Scribner.

Contains map.

The author, who was for two years connected with the American consular service in Egypt, tells the story of the conquest of Africa and the part played in its colonization by the various European nations. He is a keen observer, has a lively style and has had some unusual sources of information.

Shoemaker, Michael Myers. 915.4 S55

Indian pages and pictures; Rajputana, Sikkim, the Punjab and Kashmir. 1912. Putnam.

Lively account by an observant American of travels through India and Kashmir. Much of the ground he traversed lies along the customary tourist route, but in the Vale of Kashmir he enters a less known region. The book is amply illustrated.

Torday, E. 916.7 T63

Camp and tramp in African wilds; a record of adventure, impressions and experiences during many years spent among the savage tribes round Lake Tanganyika and in Central Africa, with a description of native life, character and customs. 1913. Lippincott.

Entertaining account of seven years spent in the Congo region and a sympathetic description of the character and customs of the natives by one who knows and understands them.

92 J164j

A small boy and others. 1913. Scribner.

Starting avowedly with the purpose of placing together some particulars of the early life of William James, the writer soon found his own boyish figure so unavoidably in the foreground that he gave up the attempt to sketch his brother's life and confines himself chiefly to the memories and impressions of his own boyhood viewed through an intervening medium of 50 years and more. The most vital part of the world he reconstructs is a New York now vanished, a place of wonderful shops and schools and museums and still more wonderful theatres. Later the background is changed to London and then to France, which he sees with the glamor of childhood. The book is written in his best and most characteristic manner.

Rules for Lending Books

1. Hours. The adult Lending Rooms of the Central and branch libraries are open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., Sundays and holidays excepted. The Childrens Rooms are closed during school hours.

2. Borrowers. Any resident or taxpayer of Pittsburgh is entitled to borrow books from the Library by signing the proper application and agreement and receiving a borrower's card. In the case of a child under fourteen years of age the application must also be signed by the parent or guardian.

Non-residents may borrow books on payment of one dollar a year in advance. If employed or attending school in the city the guarantee of a resident will be accepted instead of this fee.

Temporary residents may borrow books on making a deposit of five dollars, or more if deemed desirable, this sum to be returned to the depositor upon surrender of his borrower's card.

3. Borrowers' cards. A borrower's card may be used at the Central and branch libraries.

Each borrower is responsible for all books charged on his card.

Change of residence must be reported immediately.

Lost cards should be reported at once. Adult cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of such loss. Juvenile cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of loss is given upon the payment of a fine of five cents, or replaced without payment six months after notice of loss is given.

4. Issue of books. Holders of adult cards may borrow as many books of non-fiction as are needed at one time, together with two books of fiction, only one of which shall have been published within the current or the preceding year. Holders of juvenile cards may borrow two juvenile books at one time.

Books may be kept two weeks, except some new and popular books, which may be kept but seven days. Magazines are lent for seven days only.

5. Renewals. Non-fiction and certain standard fiction may be once renewed for two weeks from the date on which the request for renewal is received.

Other fiction, magazines and seven-day books are not renewable.

Requests for renewal may be made in person, by mail, or by telephone. In each case the call number of the book, the number of the borrower's card, and the date on which the book is due must be given. In return the borrower will receive a renewal card, which must be brought with the book when it is returned.

6. Reserves. Books may be reserved at the Library by payment of one cent for a postal card notice. As soon as the book is returned to the Library, this postal card will be mailed to the person making the request, and the book will be reserved two days. Requests for reserves may be made by telephone, in which case the cost of the postal card will be collected when the borrower calls for the book.

7. Fines. A fine of two cents a day (including Sundays and holidays) must be paid on each book kept overtime. The holder of a juvenile card may forfeit the use of his card for six months from the date upon which an overdue book is returned in place of payment of this fine. If a book is not returned within three weeks after the date on which it is due, a messenger will be sent for it. This messenger has authority to collect the fine incurred and an additional fee of twenty-five cents for messenger service.

A borrower must pay for books lost or injured while charged on his card. No books may be borrowed until fines and claims for damages have been paid.

No claim can be established because of the failure of the Post Office to deliver notices to or from the Library.

Reviews of Recent Books

Human Quintessence

By Sigurd Ibsen

"That Sigurd Ibsen is the son of the dramatist is a mere matter of curiosity, but that he was formerly an attaché of the Scandinavian Legation at Washington and later Premier of Norway and Sweden bears directly upon his book. 'Human Quintessence' is obviously not the work of a closet philosopher, but of a public man who has done his thinking at the vital point where philosophy touches morals, literature, and legislation. With only a very few exceptions, the translation seems to preserve a style of unusual lucidity and charm. One feels throughout in the presence of a mind reassuringly skeptical, as if sobered by experience with the stubbornness of established facts, yet resolutely progressive in temper...

In the universe known to natural science he discerns no genuine progress, nor conservation of values, nor unity of purpose, but brutal cross purposes, blind chance, and everlasting change... In human society, on the other hand, he detects an 'impetus,' unique in character, which 'urges us to bring our existences and the conditions about us into an agreement with an ideal picture we bear in our hearts'...

'What makes a human human,' says our author, 'is not the impulses we share with other creatures; no, it is a special impetus that stands above these impulses, regulates and modifies them, reshaping and renewing them.' The line of progress for human society must therefore be in the direction of this human impetus. It cannot possibly lead 'back to nature,' but must steadily show a wider divergence from the path of natural evolution. Society is in great part an organized opposition to nature, and it justifies itself only when it maintains its ground. It is irrelevant to approve or condemn this or that possible line of conduct on the basis that it is or is not in conformity with nature. It is pertinent only to inquire whether it is in harmony with the constitution and aim of the human organization...

Ibsen does not follow up his arraignment of existing conditions with a ready and convenient plan for establishing a new commonwealth. He has drawn from his reading of history a tincture of sobering and really tonic cynicism...

Not the redistribution of brute power, but the gradual abrogation of it, marks for the philosopher the progress of society; not the extension of suffrage, the multiplication of hands on the reins, but the ability 'to rise to a position of self-government and to obeying only the inner voice, that voice that is within us and at the same time above us.' Meanwhile, that external government is most beneficent which resists most effectively the stress of natural forces, and which impresses most deeply upon the consciousness of society the validity and sanctity of human conventions, and the desirableness of continuing to work out in the world that ideal pattern which lies in the heart. If this is true, then the most progressive society will be likewise the most conservative, the most reverent of traditions, the most critical of hasty innovation, the most reluctant to entrust its destiny to the gusty and transitory passions of the hour. Haunted by dim memories of cataclysmic floods and tragic forebodings of fiery ruin, it will not look for its eternal and unchanging sanctions in the weltering flux of natural phenomena; not seek in nature for the order, stability, justice, gentleness, and wisdom that only man has ever desired or sought to create. It will permit its scientists to return to nature, for that is their business; but it will urge its educators, its moralists, its artists, and its lawmakers to return to man and follow their pattern." Nation, 1913.

Clara Schumann

By Berthold Litzmann

"Herr Litzmann...had at his disposal no fewer than forty-seven manuscript volumes of Frau Schumann's diaries, besides countless letters written by her to her husband, as well as to Brahms and other friends, together with the replies. Out of this superabundant material Herr Litzmann constructed three volumes. The translator has wisely condensed these into two. The first includes the most romantic of all musical love stories—Schumann's long and desperate struggle for the hand of Clara Wieck, whose father resorted to the most amazing measures to thwart his designs. In the second, the tragedy is related of Schumann's mental decline and death, and the same volume has much to say about the widow's subsequent friendship with Brahms and her experiences as a concert pianist and teacher. About her were grouped Joachim, Bargiel, and other foes of Wagner and Liszt, whose antics and opinions, as recorded in these pages, give further interest to Litzmann's volumes...

Most of the details regarding Schumann's illness have long been known, but none are so pathetic as those written by his wife and widow in her diary, now first made public. His death left her with a family of four girls and three boys, the oldest being only fifteen, while the youngest had never seen his father. In these days of grief the friendship of Brahms was a great solace...

The friendship between Clara Schumann and Brahms is almost as interestingly told in these pages as her courtship with Robert. Though she travelled much, to support her large family by recitals, they met wherever it was possible, and often made long tours on foot together. Like her husband, she took to his music passionately from the beginning, and soon there was hardly a musical god beside him. The fervor of the most rabid Wagnerites pales into insignificance by the side of her frenetic enthusiasm for Brahms. She quarrelled with her friend Jenny Lind because that great artist refused to worship at the same shrine. She broke lances for Brahms daily. In Hamburg, his birth-town, she was so happy because he conducted for her that not even 'the stupidity of the audience,' which gave 'no mark of sympathy' and did not even show 'proper respect' for him, annoyed her. His music moved her to tears. More and more it monopolized her affection, until, in 1884, we find this entry in the diary: 'How sad it is that there is no one but Brahms whom one can look up to and admire as an artist'...

A list of Clara Schumann's own compositions is given in the second volume; some of them had considerable vogue for a time. Of greater interest are the eleven pages devoted to a list of the works she studied or played in public in the years 1824 to 1889. Her experiences as a concert pianist in Germany, France, and England make interesting reading, and the devotees of Brahms will eagerly peruse the letters he wrote to Clara Schumann." Nation, 1913.

Zone Policeman 88

By Harry A. Franck

"Harry A. Franck's method of travelling is unconventional. He avoids the beaten track of the tourist, the observation car, the fashionable hotel, and it is not surprising to find his book on the Panama Canal coming out with the title 'Zone Policeman—No. 88.' It is a small band of constables in khaki, this Zone police force, but it manages to keep order among 60,000 workers of many breeds and colors. Mr. Franck had his share of adventures in running down law-breakers, but his book is chiefly notable for its intimate picture of the men who handle the steam shovels, tamp the dynamite cartridges, build the concrete locks, and run the never-ending procession of earth trains. He has seen them under all conditions, and his observations, tinged as they always are, with genuine humor, strike a human note, especially when he recounts his experiences among the West Indians.

Mr. Franck's first assignment as census enumerator took him to the Government quarters for married men and bachelors, to the pay lines, to the rough walls of Culebra Cut, to the labor camps, where live negro, Spaniard, Portuguese, Greek, Italian, Turk, Hindu, Syrian—a chaos of nationalities—seventy-two in all. Of the three native Americans in the corps of seven enumerators, two spoke only their mother tongue, and Mr. Franck complains that there still hangs over us that old provincial backwoods bogie, 'English is good enough for me.'

Mr. Franck has a word to say about Socialism on the Canal Zone. To be sure, it is only a modified variety, but 'there are a number of little points in the management of this private Government strip of earth that savors more or less of the Socialist's programme,' and there is also a benevolent despot, an omnipotent, omniscient, omnipresent ruler, popularly known as 'the Colonel'—Col. Goethals. His machinery runs like clockwork, and Mr. Franck is convinced that 'the Canal Zone is the best-governed district in the United States,' and that 'Americans really can govern.'" Nation, 1913.

A Turkish woman's European impressions; ed. & with an introduction by Grace Ellison. 1913. Lippincott.

"A very distinguished European Turkish lady...has jotted down her impressions of the modern woman...She herself is emancipate, but she is Oriental to the bone. She does not see where the European woman has any serious advantage, except in physical liberty, over the Eastern lady of the harem. Her book reveals a pessimism and sadness which, coupled with the charm of a distinguished personality, give her work a note of critical significance out of the common. She sees her Western sister in the heyday of the movement—and she remains untouched, doubting, even cynical." English review, 1913.

C. Hoover and L. H. Hoover. 1912. Mining Magazine.

"Bibliographical notes," p.599-606.

"De re metallica" is the most important of the writings of Agricola (whose real name was Georg Bauer). It was the first extensive systematic treatise on mining and metallurgical processes.

"During 180 years it was not superseded as the text-book and guide to miners and metallurgists... That it passed through some ten editions in three languages at a period when the printing of such a volume was no ordinary undertaking is in itself sufficient evidence of the importance in which it was held, and is a record that no other volume upon the same subjects has equalled since." Translator's preface.

Early Christian and Byzantine architecture. 1912. Black. (Great buildings and how to enjoy them.)

"To the amateur, for whom it is intended, this simple introduction to a formidable subject may well prove helpful, particularly if the illustrations be carefully studied with the short explanatory notices. The illustrations are well chosen from Byzantine buildings in Jerusalem, Constantinople, Ravenna and Venice." Saturday review, 1913.Jackson, Thomas Graham.

Byzantine and Romanesque architecture. 2v. 1913. Cambridge University Press.

"Chronological table of architectural examples," v.2, p.269-277.

"Mr. Jackson has traced the history of Byzantine and Romanesque architecture from the decline of the Classic styles to the advent of the Gothic. The work is thoroughly practical, details of and reasons for the methods of construction are given at length, and students of architecture will find the descriptions all that can be desired...A master of his subject, Mr. Jackson has a gift of clear and felicitous expression." Outlook (London), 1913.

Practical reflections on the figurative art of singing; tr. by Pietro Buzzi. 1912. Badger.

Mancini (1716-1800) was one of the most famous teachers of the old Italian bel canto. He lived at the time when florid song was in its full glory in Italy and his book gives many hints which will be valuable to teachers and singers to-day. He gives practical directions for attaining a good trill, agility and other qualities much admired in his period, as well as many details concerning favorites of the golden age of florid song. Condensed from Nation, 1913.

Human quintessence; authorized translation by M. H. Janson. 1912. Huebsch.

Contents: Nature and man.—Why politics lags behind.—Of human aptitudes and a human art.—Of great men; an essay in valuation.

Obviously not the work of a closet philosopher, but of a public man who has done his thinking at the vital point where philosophy touches morals, literature and legislation. The book is a sharp criticism of current naturalistic tendencies. The author detects in human society an impetus, unique in character, which "urges us to bring our existences and the conditions about us into agreement with an ideal picture we bear in our hearts," and he believes that the line of progress for human society must be in the direction of this human impulse. Condensed from Nation, 1913.

Individual Biography

Borrow, George.

92 B639b

Letters of George Borrow to the British and Foreign Bible Society, published by direction of the committee; ed. by T. H. Darlow. 1911. Hodder.

In 1833 Borrow was appointed an agent of the Bible Society. His first duty, the translation of the New testament into the Manchu language, took him to St. Petersburg. In 1835 he was transferred to Portugal and Spain, where for five years he was engaged in distributing translations of the Bible. During this time he addressed to the Bible Society a remarkable series of letters, which were found in 1899, after having been for many years mislaid, and which are now published for the first time. The letters have great autobiographical value.

Damas, Roger, comte de.

92 D178d

Memoirs of the comte Roger de Damas (1787-1806); ed. and annotated by Jacques Rambaud; tr. by Mrs Rodolph Stawell. 1913. Chapman.

"Notes," p.435-488.

"These memoirs...give a vivid picture of the closing years of the ancien régime and the society of the émigrés in Germany and Naples. Beginning his career in the army of Russia in 1787, subsequently an officer in the armies of Artois and Condé, and finally in the service of the Bourbons in Naples, the Count was, during his short, but adventurous and brilliant career, a shrewd and attentive observer of men and events. The memoirs, sincere and piquant, are a real contribution to the study of the epoch." Athenaeum, 1912.

Demetrius, George.

92 D419d

When I was a boy in Greece [ed.] by J. A. Huybers. 1913. Lothrop.

Reminiscences of a Greek lad who grew up in Macedonia and who has recently (1913) settled in Boston. He writes feelingly of Turkish oppression in his home land.

Frémont, Elizabeth Benton.

92 F921f

Recollections of Elizabeth Benton Frémont, daughter of the pathfinder General John C. Frémont and Jessie Benton Frémont, his wife; comp. by I. T. Martin. 1912. Hitchcock.

"Simple recital of the personal experiences of the daughter of General Frémont, in California in '49, in Paris, Washington, New York, California, Arizona and in California again, where she now lives. Because of her father's prominence at one time and for her recollections of the early days and noted people, the tale has considerable interest." A. L. A. booklist, 1913.

La Follette, Robert Marion.

92 L148l

La Follette's autobiography; a personal narrative of political experiences. 1913. La Follette Co.

"Much of it deals with issues that still in solution, and this fact adds to its interest, particularly since its author is playing an active part in reference to them... The earlier chapters...containing the account of the struggle in Wisconsin, which in the end placed that State in the forefront of railway and other industrial regulation by government, have a dramatic interest that is equal to their political value as a first-hand record of one of the most characteristic and instructive upheavals of this generation." Nation, 1913.

Napoleon I, emperor of the French.

Fisher, Herbert Albert Laurens. Napoleon. 1913. Holt. (Home university library of modern knowledge.)

Appendixes: Some maxims of Napoleon.—Genealogy of the Bonaparte family.

"Bibliography," p.252-253.

This little volume attempts to give not more than an outline of Napoleon's career, but it affords a clear and judicial view of Napoleon the man.

Napoleon II, king of Rome and duke of Reichstadt.

92 N129at

Tschudi, Clara. Napoleon's son; authorised translation from the Norwegian by E. M. Cope. 1912. Allen.

"List of the principal works consulted," p.315-316.

Relates the short and sad career of "L'Aiglon," son of Napoleon I, who cherished a passionate devotion to his father's memory, to France and to military ideals. Told with sympathy and without the sentimentalism to which the subject easily lends itself.

Patrick, St.

92 P297t

Dyck, Walther von. Georg von Reichenbach. 1912. (Munich, Deutsches Museum. Lebensbeschreibungen und urkunden.)

"Zusätze und literarische notizen," p.132-135; "Literarische veröfentlichungen," p.136.

Reichenbach (1772-1826) was a German astronomical instrument maker whose most important service to astronomy was the introduction into observatories of the meridian or transit circle. The author presents not only an interesting biography of Reichenbach but also makes available a large collection of valuable documents relating to the construction of instruments of precision and of machinery. Contains numerous plates.

Books for the Blind

The Library has a collection of about 2,000 books for the blind. The Pennsylvania Home Teaching Society and Free Circulating Library for the Blind supports in this district a teacher, herself totally blind, who, under the direction of this Library, visits the adult blind in their homes and teaches them to read. This service and the use of the books are absolutely free to all the adult blind in and near Pittsburgh, and the Librarian requests that names and addresses of such persons be sent to him in order that the teacher may call upon them.

Rules for Lending Books

1. Hours. The adult Lending Rooms of the Central and branch libraries are open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., Sundays and holidays excepted. The Childrens Rooms are closed during school hours.

2. Borrowers. Any resident or taxpayer of Pittsburgh is entitled to borrow books from the Library by signing the proper application and agreement and receiving a borrower's card. In the case of a child under fourteen years of age the application must also be signed by the parent or guardian.

Non-residents may borrow books on payment of one dollar a year in advance. If employed or attending school in the city the guarantee of a resident will be accepted instead of this fee.

Temporary residents may borrow books on making a deposit of five dollars, or more if deemed desirable, this sum to be returned to the depositor upon surrender of his borrower's card.

3. Borrowers' cards. A borrower's card may be used at the Central and branch libraries.

Each borrower is responsible for all books charged on his card.

Change of residence must be reported immediately.

Lost cards should be reported at once. Adult cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of such loss. Juvenile cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of loss is given upon the payment of a fine of five cents, or replaced without payment six months after notice of loss is given.

4. Issue of books. Holders of adult cards may borrow as many books of non-fiction as are needed at one time, together with two books of fiction, only one of which shall have been published within the current or the preceding year. Holders of juvenile cards may borrow two juvenile books at one time.

Books may be kept two weeks, except some new and popular books, which may be kept but seven days. Magazines are lent for seven days only.

5. Renewals. Non-fiction and certain standard fiction may be once renewed for two weeks from the date on which the request for renewal is received.

Other fiction, magazines and seven-day books are not renewable.

Requests for renewal may be made in person, by mail, or by telephone. In each case the call number of the book, the number of the borrower's card, and the date on which the book is due must be given. In return the borrower will receive a renewal card, which must be brought with the book when it is returned.

6. Reserves. Books may be reserved at the Library by payment of one cent for a postal card notice. As soon as the book is returned to the Library, this postal card will be mailed to the person making the request, and the book will be reserved two days. Requests for reserves may be made by telephone, in which case the cost of the postal card will be collected when the borrower calls for the book.

7. Fines. A fine of two cents a day (including Sundays and holidays) must be paid on each book kept overtime. The holder of a juvenile card may forfeit the use of his card for six months from the date upon which an overdue book is returned in place of payment of this fine. If a book is not returned within three weeks after the date on which it is due, a messenger will be sent for it. This messenger has authority to collect the fine incurred and an additional fee of twenty-five cents for messenger service.

A borrower must pay for books lost or injured while charged on his card. No books may be borrowed until fines and claims for damages have been paid.

No claim can be established because of the failure of the Post Office to deliver notices to or from the Library.

Publications of the Library Now in Print

Reviews of Recent Books

Life of John Bright

By George Macaulay Trevelyan

"John Bright could not be got in his life-time to take any interest in a possible biography. 'My life is in my speeches,' he said simply. That was true, for into his speeches he had wrought the thought and purpose and struggle of his life. Yet they were as a fine product to the making of which went much that we can understand only by all that can be extracted from his letters and diaries, as well as from current records and the contemporary judgments of his friends or foes. This aid to knowledge of the true Bright Mr. Trevelyan has given us in this volume with the literary skill, the restraint, the penetration, the entire fairness which we have learned to expect of him. The result is a rich and repaying book...

Great themes upon which to wreak his eloquence, John Bright did not lack. The wrongs of millions of his countrymen, economic freedom, enfranchisement, the high issues of peace and war, the pursuit of human slavery to its extinction—these were the subjects on which he won the ear of England and of the world. To Bright the Corn Laws, into the long fight for the repeal of which he poured all the energy of his young manhood, were no mere legislative blunder, no pale abstraction. He saw their effects written in human misery all around him in Lancashire. The dwarfed and blighted lives of the factory-workers were to him the express results of law-making by a class against a class—what he described in his private diary as 'the selfishness and fraud which distinguish the government of the English oligarchy'...

What Bright did for America and for freedom during our Civil War is part of the history of that struggle. Again he set himself against aristocratic and official England, and again he was right. His constant appeal was that in the future it might not be said by Americans that 'in the darkest hour of their country's trials, England, the land of their fathers, looked on with icy coldness and saw unmoved the perils and calamities of their children'...

The necessary political framework of his picture of Bright's life [Mr Trevelyan] has kept, as it should be, in skeleton. He explains without overloading. Nor is he an indiscriminate panegyrist. He is frank in dealing with Bright's few mistakes. And an occasional shrewd comment reminds us how the lapsing years often leave even a sane and honest political judgment looking awry... But the total impression of Bright which the volume makes is that of the finest strength and most complete courage blent with a tenderness of heart like a woman's." Nation, 1913.

Life and Letters of John Paul Jones

By Mrs Reginald De Koven

"This is an unusually earnest and successful endeavor to write the life and depict the character of one of the most striking figures in our national history. Few of the men whose courage and hope and perseverance helped to shake off the yoke of England had so varied and tempestuous a story as this son of the landscape gardener of Leith, whose yearning for distinction and glory led him such a stormy cruise over the troubled waters of the world. Misrepresentation and misunderstanding, indifference and neglect followed him in some sort to the grave. His tomb was forgotten, his letters scattered or lost. Some of his biographers did scanty credit to his memory, but Mrs. de Koven has gathered the records of his stormy life together and worthily told his story.

Brought up in sight of blue water, John Paul took kindly to the sea. But it was by a very roundabout and varied course that he rose from the berth of a middy in the British navy to be captain of the Providence, of the American fleet. He had been in the merchant marine before his midshipman days, and afterwards was in turn mate of a slaver,—a position which he abandoned in disgust,—an actor, with Moody in Jamaica, and a captain in the West Indian trade. He finally succeeded in getting a ship of his own, when the unfortunate and half accidental killing of a mutineer drove him into a retirement from which he emerged with the new name Jones added to his patronymic and with a commission of first lieutenant on the flagship Alfred, which he manned and armed and over which he hoisted the first flag that ever floated over an American ship of war. This commission was soon changed to that of captain of the Providence, and his naval career in the service of the new Republic was fairly begun.

The rest of John Paul Jones' career is a familiar story to every schoolboy who has thumbed his history. But Mrs. de Koven has gone over the old ground thoroughly and, alas! has found more than one old tale untrue by the test of original documents...

His eager thirst for glory, his inborn aptitude for gentle and cultured ways are borne out by this critical history, and we may now see with greater clearness the times and occasions which developed these qualities...

The last and not the least interesting chapter of the work deals with the character of Jones. He was not vainglorious, but an open and ardent lover of glory; sensitive in body and mind, prone to brood over his misfortunes, clement and delicate in feeling, chivalrous and loyal, fiery but humane,—a born leader of men." America, 1913.

Life and Letters of George Gordon Meade

"General Meade has...been fortunate in his biographers. The first was Colonel Bache, a cousin, who gave an admirable account of Meade's personality. The second was Mr. Pennypacker, whose careful military study of Meade's career, based on the War Records, has been accepted as authoritative both at home and abroad. The work now just published consists primarily of Meade's letters to his wife during the Mexican and Civil Wars. These are connected by a thread of biography supplied by his son, Colonel George Meade, with some additions by his grandson, George Gordon Meade, who edits the whole. This biographical matter is calm and clear in style, with no trace of partisanship or special pleading. In its simplicity and reserve, indeed, it foregoes opportunities for popular appeal. More than this, however, there are over two hundred pages of appendices, in which are given the correspondence between Meade and Halleck after Gettysburg, many newspaper articles attacking Meade, his testimony before the Congressional Committee on the Conduct of the War, and much other matter impugning or defending him. In addition, there is a set of twenty-four maps showing the positions of the Union and Confederate armies before, during, and after Gettysburg...

The entirely new part of this work lies of course in General Meade's letters to his wife. They are attractive and interesting, and reveal a character fiery and firm, considerate and gentle. In the darkest hours he is not despondent, and in the brightest not too much elate. His judgment of men and measures is extraordinarily just. In the thick of things, his views as to what should be done, both politically and in the field, are such as time has proved accurate. Towards the end his indignation at the treatment meted out to him occasionally breaks forth in strong words. 'I don't believe the truth will ever be known,' he wrote, 'and I have a great contempt for History.' These letters are rich material for a future historian. There are hundreds of incidents, and innumerable flashes of light upon important events, which can be found nowhere else." Dial, 1913.

Eminent English Men and Women in Paris, 1800-1850

By Roger Boutet de Monvel

"The author of this scholarly and fascinating book, which was deservedly crowned by the French Academy last year, has been singularly fortunate in his translator. G. Herring, who is responsible for the English version, has done a really notable piece of work in preserving to an unusual degree the lightness of touch and grace of idiom that characterize the French, and that are almost invariably lost in the transference to our more stolid forms of speech. M. de Monvel himself seems to possess exactly the right equipment for his task: a wide sympathy and acquaintance with English habits of life, a profound erudition, and an unconquerable sense of humor. With the genius of his race he understands how to marier le sérieux au riant, and whether he is grave or gay, he writes with equal charm. He is very subtle, too, as he shows us in his analysis of Thackeray's diatribes against the frivolous and immoral French nation; this is a delicious chapter of satirical writing. If Thackeray lays about him with a club, M. de Monvel parries easily with a rapier, and his ripostes are the more effective because he has a very sincere appreciation of the novelist's genius...

But if Thackeray failed sometimes to appreciate the inhabitants of the land where he spent, nevertheless, a good deal of his time, there is a long list of English men and women who have made themselves thoroughly at home there. Napoleon's prisoners at Verdun found many mitigations for the tedium of their long captivity, and made of that sleepy city a gay pleasure resort that would certainly have merited the strictures of the severe Victorian moralist. Later, when the war was over, Wellington and his army were quartered in Paris, and general, officers, and privates alike seem to have found plenty to amuse them during their sojourn, and, in marked contrast to the conduct of Blücher and his men, to have established themselves on very good terms with the inhabitants. Some of the officers, indeed, found the lure of Paris so irresistible that afterwards they made their permanent home there, and, like the inscrutable Capt. Gronow, on whose journals M. de Monvel has drawn freely for information, became the arbiters of a society which they and their successors in the next generation infected with a severe attack of Anglomania...

It would be possible to quote indefinitely from this charming book, but that would be apt to convey the false impression that M. de Monvel's work is principally a volume of entertaining gossip. So far from that being the case, the author displays throughout a definite constructive purpose, which is to illustrate the somewhat remarkable fact that, despite the most radical differences of sentiment and manners between France and England, there are, as he says, politics apart, 'few nations who have maintained a more uninterrupted intercourse with one another, and probably fewer still whose thought and culture have acted and reacted so closely one upon another.' " Nation, 1913.

European Cities at Work

By Frederic C. Howe

"Without delving very deeply for causes, or analyzing methods in great detail, Dr. Howe gives us rapid and interesting sketches of the municipal activities of many German and some British cities, and of the results achieved by them. This makes fascinating reading. Pleasanter than romance is the series of pictures which the book calls up before our minds—pictures of well-planned cities, of beautiful streets, magnificent railway stations, suburbs laid out with a view not only to convenience, but to comfort and coziness. More rewarding than most traveler's impressions are the thoroughly informed comments of the author upon municipal causes and effects.

The implied, and sometimes expressed, contrast of American with European cities gives zest to the book. Certainly in America 'the city has grown faster than our city sense,' and we have not yet learned 'to think in big-community terms.' As we read of the surprisingly large number of things which the German city successfully does—not only of municipal lighting and street-railway systems that actually pay a profit and of public works undertaken in a big-visioned way, but also of forms of taxation which place the principal burden upon the rich, and of compensation and insurance laws that protect the working-man—when we read of all this we inevitably begin to feel that we are sadly behind the times. To be told, in addition to all the rest, that in Germany the theater is subsidized, with advantage to general culture; that the cities provide generously for amusement in connection with public or semi-public places; that nearly all the larger towns maintain symphony orchestras with official directors—such facts as these serve to emphasize a contrast that is otherwise almost too obvious for comfort...

The advantage of the German city, it appears, lies very largely in its freedom under the State to do anything it is not expressly forbidden to do. The American city, on the other hand, is under bondage to the State legislature. 'Privileged interests, political bosses, and suspicious farmers have been engaged for a generation in welding chains about our cities until they have become our most helpless and inelastic political agencies.' Home rule and the creation of civic pride are the remedies for the existing municipal inefficiency...

Of especial interest is the successful application by the Germans of the principle of taxing land values. Such taxation has proved effectual in discouraging any one from acquiring land except for use; it has facilitated municipal improvement; and it derives revenue from the value which the community as a whole creates...

It is no part of Dr. Howe's plan, however, to advocate definite changes. His book supplies facts formative of opinion, and will help to create that 'city sense,' the lack of which he deplors." North American review, 1913.

Penal philosophy; tr. by Rapelje Howell, with an editorial preface by Edward Lindsey and an introduction by R. H. Gault. 1912. Little. (Modern criminal science series.)

The author's long career as a criminal magistrate provided ample opportunity for first-hand knowledge of the criminal, which he utilized not only for the purpose of improving criminal procedure but for developing a philosophy of crime. He opposed strongly the anthropological theory of crime held by Lombroso and his school, uphold-ing instead the social causes and finding in his theory of imitation a strong factor in producing crime. He discusses at much length the problem of the freedom of the will.

745 R38

Modern practical design. 1912. Batsford.

"Clear account of the principles, technique, and processes involved in the practical craftsmanship of design in modern applied art. Treats briefly of wallpaper, textiles, book decoration, pottery, stained glass, metal work and jewelry, wood working and carving, dress embroidery, fancy costumes, fans and lace, and posters, with a valuable chapter on plant form as the basis of ornament. As a general survey it is one of the best works for the designer and general worker in the crafts, and contains much that is of interest to the teacher. The chapters on design are in general the best. The 140 illustrations are largely reproductions of designs." A. L. A. booklist, 1912.

716 J25

Hardy flower book; ed. by F. W. Harvey. 1913. Country Life. ("Country life" library.)

Furnishes in an attractive form much practical information as to the right methods of planting and cultivating hardy flowers, with descriptions and illustrations of many varieties. The writer is a recognized authority on the subject.

Meier, William Herman Dietrich.

716 M57

School and home gardens. 1913. Ginn.

Contains compact and thorough directions concerning most of the plants which schools and homes require, including the care of trees, shrubs and vines and the work of grafting. The study, transplanting and cultivation of wild flowers are encouraged also. In style and illustrations the book is a model, but its mature vocabulary and its assumption of a pretty complete knowledge of garden theory and practice unfit it for its intended use as a text-book in grammar grades. Condensed from Nation, 1913.

Amusements

- Travers, Jerome Dunstan. 796.35 T695
Travers' golf book. 1913. Macmillan.
The book is both frankly and accurately named. In addition to an account of the author's golfing career, it is an exposition of the game—as he plays it. His likes and dislikes and personal idiosyncrasies are made the point of departure for each discussion. It is this thrusting forward of the personal equation which gives his book unusual interest indeed, but deprives it of the right to be regarded as an all-round and thoroughly sound treatise on golf. Condensed from Nation, 1913.
- Wilding, Anthony Frederick. 796.33 W71
On the court and off. [1912.] Methuen.
Practical advice to lawn-tennis players by the New Zealander who recently (1912) defended his title of champion of England against Maurice E. McLoughlin. Mrs Larcombe contributes a chapter of advice to women players, and André Gobert, a chapter about the game in France.

A number of these papers have appeared in the "Atlantic monthly," where they attracted much attention both from their thoughtfulness and from the youth of the writer.

"In its entirety it is a quite unusual mixture of self-analysis and moral enthusiasm. The self-analysis will help many to a knowledge of themselves... The moral enthusiasm is perfectly sincere, and should have value as an evangel of youth to youth." Springfield Republican, 1913.

"In a series of brilliant essays Mr. Jerrold has analyzed with much acuteness the prevailing characters of the French and English people, with results that will prove surprising to those who have hitherto accepted without criticism the baseless generalisations which have passed into circulation as self-evident truths. The view that Frenchmen are feather-brained and fantastic and that Englishmen are remarkable for their logic and common-sense is demonstrated... to be not only false but an actual inversion of the facts, the English being the romantics, the French the realists of the modern world." Outlook (London), 1913.

The battle of Gettysburg; a comprehensive narrative. 1913. Harper.

The author, a Union officer, knows the ground intimately, has read and weighed the voluminous literature of the campaign and writes clearly and interestingly. His judgments of men and movements are, on the whole, such as have come to be accepted by more critical authorities; while on controverted points he fortifies his own conclusions by an adequate presentation of the evidence. Extended appendixes give the rosters of the two armies, together with the record of West Point graduates who served on the two sides. The illustrations reproduce a number of contemporary prints. Condensed from Nation, 1913.

The flowery republic [China]. 1913. Appleton.

"Diary of the revolutionary rebellion," p.431-447.

"Mr. McCormick's work on the revolution in China, its causes, its leaders, its failures and its successes, is a valuable contribution to the literature of the subject. He deals with the rebellion from its inception and in a spirit of sympathy with the inarticulate masses of the people, whose woes are the justification of the rising. The descriptions of the leaders of the revolutions, their motives and methods, are most useful, and there can be little doubt that this is the most thorough account of the 'politics' of new China that has yet been given to the world." Outlook (London), 1913.

Trevelyan, George Macaulay. Life of John Bright. 1913. Constable.

"Some books on John Bright," p.11.

"Mr. Trevelyan has been helped by Bright's family, who have been able to put him in possession of some valuable new material. His volume of four hundred and sixty-five pages is at once good to read, compact, and comprehensive." Spectator, 1913.

The principal subjects treated are the Anti-Corn-Law League, Bright's resistance to the Crimean war and to European entanglements generally, his support of the Northern cause during the American civil war, his early advocacy of Irish church and land legislation, and above all, the winning of the vote for working-men, the cause to which the best years of his life were given. His private life, with glimpses of old industrial Lancashire and the Quaker community of seventy years ago, is not neglected.

Nyström-Hamilton, Mrs Louise. Ellen Key; her life and her work; authorised translation from the Swedish by A. E. B. Fries, with an introduction by Havelock Ellis. 1913. Putnam.

"There is no attempt in this biography to estimate the work or spread the doctrines of a woman who, as one of the chief representatives of the Woman Movement, yet holds a unique position regarding it. It is a simple record of external events, and it will clear away some of the misconceptions regarding Ellen Key that have to a certain extent limited the influence of her words... The value of this 'Life' is chiefly that it stimulates interest in Ellen Key's books." Outlook, 1913.

92 M553m

Life and letters [comp. and written] by George Meade; ed. by G. G. Meade. 2v. 1913. Scribner.

Consists primarily of the letters of Gen. Meade (1815-72) to his wife during the Mexican and Civil wars. These are connected by a thread of biography supplied by his son, with some additions by his grandson. There are 24 maps showing the position of the Union and the Confederate armies in the battle of Gettysburg.

Morris, William.

92 M9182co

Compton-Rickett, Arthur. William Morris; a study in personality, with an introduction by R. B. Cunninghame Graham. 1913. Jenkins.

"Analytical biography and synopsis of events contemporary with Morris' career," p.269-317.

As poet, craftsman, prose romancer, and social reformer, William Morris has left an ineffaceable mark on history, and the points and qualities of his virile character, his strength and independence in social effort and literature, as well as in the domain of art, are most happily delineated in Mr Rickett's volume. Book contains a characteristic and pithy introduction by Mr Cunninghame Graham, excellent portraits of Morris and his wife, and a useful and concise analytical biography, which is a unique feature in a most pleasant and readable book. Condensed from Outlook (London), 1913.

Early correspondence, 1805-40; ed. by his son, Rollo Russell. 2v. 1913. Unwin.

Letters of the English statesman, orator and author (1792-1878). He held many important government positions, was a prominent member of the Whig party and an advocate of parliamentary reform.

Mr Rollo Russell has wisely selected for the present work largely from the letters dealing with general matters and but sparingly from those of a purely political nature, thereby giving the work a greater interest to the general reader. A useful feature of the book is the series of brief biographies of the principal correspondents whose letters are included; there are a few good portraits. Condensed from Outlook (London), 1913.

Jerrold, Clare. Married life of Queen Victoria. 1913. Nash.

Continuation of "The early court of Queen Victoria." The volume is as much a consideration of the character of the prince consort as of that of Queen Victoria. It bears testimony to the enormous influence which he exerted and explains some of the mistaken opinions regarding his personality.

Fiction

Blackwood, Algernon.B517p

A prisoner in fairyland (the book that "Uncle Paul" wrote). Macmillan.

A retired merchant while visiting the home of his childhood finds that he can transfer his thoughts to the past and dream over his childish experiences. He helps others to do likewise and so get out of themselves into "the fairyland the whole world needs."

Cather, Willa Sibert.C2822o

O pioneers! Houghton.

Walt Whitman's great hymn "Pioneers, O pioneers!" furnished Miss Cather with a title, and indeed something of Whitman's vision inspired the book. It is a story of Swedes, Bohemians and French winning the almost untamable Nebraska prairie land in the face of difficulties and inexperience. The land itself, "the Divide," is made almost a character in the narrative and supplies that sense of conflict with the elemental forces of life which is essential to real tragedy. It is written with sympathy and power, compactly and with perfect restraint—a book about the actual soil of our country, out of which has sprung the nation's wealth, its silent heroism in time past, its silent strength to-day. Condensed from the Philadelphia press, 1913.

 Wilhelm Meister's theatrical mission, with introduction by Harry Mayne; tr. by G. A. Page. Heinemann.
 Translation of a first version of the earlier part of "Wilhelm Meister's apprenticeship," which Goethe intended to destroy but which was discovered in Switzerland 125 years after it was written. The difference between the early work and the later is so great that the first version may be regarded almost as a new masterpiece, the fruit of Goethe's youth, as the "Apprenticeship" was the product of his middle age. The introduction is a scholarly estimate of the importance of the work.

Books for the Blind

The Library has a collection of about 2,000 books for the blind. The Pennsylvania Home Teaching Society and Free Circulating Library for the Blind supports in this district a teacher, herself totally blind, who, under the direction of this Library, visits the adult blind in their homes and teaches them to read. This service and the use of the books are absolutely free to all the adult blind in and near Pittsburgh, and the Librarian requests that names and addresses of such persons be sent to him in order that the teacher may call upon them.

Rules for Lending Books

1. Hours. The adult Lending Rooms of the Central and branch libraries are open daily from 9 a. m. to 9 p. m., Sundays and holidays excepted. The Childrens Rooms are closed during school hours. (See Schedule of Library hours.)

2. Borrowers. Any resident or taxpayer of Pittsburgh is entitled to borrow books from the Library by signing the proper application and agreement and receiving a borrower's card. In the case of a child under fourteen years of age the application must also be signed by the parent or guardian.

Non-residents may borrow books on payment of one dollar a year in advance. If employed or attending school in the city the guarantee of a resident will be accepted instead of this fee.

Temporary residents may borrow books on making a deposit of five dollars, or more if deemed desirable, this sum to be returned to the depositor upon surrender of his borrower's card.

3. Borrowers' cards. A borrower's card may be used at the Central and branch libraries.

Each borrower is responsible for all books charged on his card.

Change of residence must be reported immediately.

Lost cards should be reported at once. Adult cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of such loss. Juvenile cards will be replaced fourteen days after notice of loss is given upon the payment of a fine of five cents, or replaced without payment six months after notice of loss is given.

4. Issue of books. Holders of adult cards may borrow as many books of non-fiction as are needed at one time, together with two books of fiction, only one of which shall have been published within the current or the preceding year. Holders of juvenile cards may borrow two juvenile books at one time.

Books may be kept two weeks, except some new and popular books, which may be kept but seven days. Magazines are lent for seven days only.

5. Renewals. Non-fiction and certain standard fiction may be once renewed for two weeks from the date on which the request for renewal is received.

Other fiction, magazines and seven-day books are not renewable.

Requests for renewal may be made in person, by mail, or by telephone. In each case the call number of the book, the number of the borrower's card, and the date on which the book is due must be given. In return the borrower will receive a renewal card, which must be brought with the book when it is returned.

6. Reserves. Books may be reserved at the Library by payment of one cent for a postal card notice. As soon as the book is returned to the Library, this postal card will be mailed to the person making the request, and the book will be reserved two days. Requests for reserves may be made by telephone, in which case the cost of the postal card will be collected when the borrower calls for the book.

7. Fines. A fine of two cents a day (including Sundays and holidays) must be paid on each book kept overtime. The holder of a juvenile card may forfeit the use of his card for six months from the date upon which an overdue book is returned in place of payment of this fine. If a book is not returned within three weeks after the date on which it is due, a messenger will be sent for it. This messenger has authority to collect the fine incurred and an additional fee of twenty-five cents for messenger service.

A borrower must pay for books lost or injured while charged on his card. No books may be borrowed until fines and claims for damages have been paid.

No claim can be established because of the failure of the Post Office to deliver notices to or from the Library.

The Reports of the Thirteenth Census

The Library has for some time been receiving Bulletins from the United States Census Office, giving advance statistics of the Thirteenth Census, and we have now the Abstract volume of the completed work, forming an interesting unit volume of statistics of the United States. The statistics were collected in 1910, but relate in general to the year ending December 31, 1909.

The Final Reports of the Thirteenth Census are published in eleven large quarto volumes covering the subjects: Population; Agriculture and Irrigation; Manufactures; Mines and Quarries. Several of these volumes are now in the Library and others are nearly ready for distribution. Each state, together with Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico, is taken up in order and statistics on the above subjects are given.

In the volume devoted to Population will be found not only the number and distribution of the inhabitants of the country by states, counties and cities, with maps and diagrams illustrating the statistical tables, but also the color or race of the people, their nativity, parentage, sex, age, marital condition, place of birth by state and country, date of immigration, school attendance and illiteracy, dwellings and families.

Statistics of agriculture include name, color, and country of birth of occupant of each farm; tenure; acreage of farm; acreage of woodland and character of timber thereon; value of farm improvements; value of farm implements; amount and value of live stock on farms and ranges; number and value of domestic animals not on farms and ranges; acreage of crops planted and to be planted during the year of enumeration; the acreage of crops, and quantity and value of crops and other farm products for the year.

Under the heading Irrigation are statistics showing the location and character of irrigation enterprises; quantity of land irrigated in the arid region of the United States and in each state and county in that section under state and Federal laws; the price at which these lands, including water rights, are obtainable; the character and value of crops produced on irrigated lands, the amount of water used per acre for said irrigation, and whether it was obtainable from natural, state, or private works; the location of the various projects, and the methods of construction, with facts as to their physical condition and the amount of capital invested in such irrigation works.

In the volumes devoted to Manufactures, statistics are compiled primarily for the purpose of showing the absolute and relative magnitude of the different branches of industry covered, and their growth and decline. Incidentally an effort is made to present data throwing light upon character of ownership, location of establishments, size of establishments, and similar subjects. The census of 1909, like that of 1904, was confined by law to manufacturing establishments conducted under what is known as the factory system, excluding the neighborhood, household, and hand industries.

Many subjects which in previous years were included in the volumes of the Census have been omitted from those of this last enumeration; but while they appear to be omissions they are only transferred from this publication to others which come from the permanent Census Bureau, established in 1909. For example, the subject of mortality was covered by the Twelfth

Census, but, as the mortality statistics are now collected and published annually by the permanent Census Bureau, the subject was omitted from the Thirteenth Census.

The Abstract volume is probably the one which will be most generally used by those in search of ordinary statistical information, for it is estimated that it gives all the information on the Census that nine-tenths of the people want. It is a condensation of the complete census reports, both tables and text, and not merely a compilation of tables.

This volume is interesting in its make up, and is published in fifty-two different editions. It is divided into two sections. The first relates to the United States as a whole, to the different states, and to the principal cities, covering the subjects included in the final volumes; the second part relates to some one state, its counties, cities and other civil divisions. The first section contains the principal statistics of all states in condensed form, while the second section gives the minute statistics of a particular state. Those who are interested in Pennsylvania will want the Pennsylvania edition, while those interested in Ohio, Nebraska or Massachusetts, will want the editions including those states as the second section of the Abstract.

A limited number of the bound volumes of these combined editions have been published and these may be obtained by individuals from the Census Office only, but the Abstract alone and any state supplement may be secured from the Superintendent of Documents for one dollar plus the price of the state volume desired.

Debate Index Supplement

In July 1911 this Library published a Debate Index, which combined in one list the indexes to all the debaters' manuals in the Library. The edition was exhausted in a little more than a year, and in November 1912 a new and enlarged edition was published. The following list is a supplement to the second edition, and indexes the debaters' manuals which have been added to the Library since November 1912. It includes references on twenty-six new topics and additional references on one hundred and four topics included in the second edition.

The second edition, a pamphlet of 84 pages, is still in print and will be sent postpaid for 20 cents. This Supplement is also issued separately and may be obtained for 5 cents postpaid.

A list of the manuals indexed is given below. The "Debates" of this Library, referred to under various topics in the Index, is a loose-leaf book containing briefs and references copied from various sources or supplementing lists to be found elsewhere. The Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh "Reference lists" are less complete manuscript lists compiled in response to requests.

Garden Craft in Europe

By H. Inigo Triggs

"This sumptuous volume will be welcomed by the lover of the formal garden...

Although he disclaims any attempt at an exhaustive treatment of his subject—for instance, he gives but a passing glance at the gardens of Norway, Sweden, and Russia—the author shows that he possesses a very wide and intimate knowledge of the principal gardens of Europe. His first chapter is devoted to ancient gardens. He traces the origin of the art of garden design to Egypt, Persia, and Assyria, whence it was passed on to Greece, and afterwards to Rome. He quotes Homer's account of the garden of Alcinous, and gives a plan of Pliny's villa at Laurentium which shows a very elaborate garden plan. So, too, do the illustrations of Sallust's house at Pompeii, while in the villa of Maecenas a building was excavated in 1874 which is supposed to have been a conservatory with a heating system. Perhaps it was with reference to this building that Martial wished he were his friend's apple tree rather than his guest, for it was protected from the cold by glass or talc, whilst his bedroom had none.

After a short chapter on the gardens of the Middle Ages, we proceed to the Italian garden and the French gardens of the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries. The gardens of Versailles and their author, André le Nôtre, the very gorgeous gentleman whose portrait forms the frontispiece of the volume, receive, as they deserve, a chapter to themselves. The works were probably begun in 1662 or 1663; by 1665 the sum of 1,500,000 livres had been spent on them, and they were not finished till about 1688. Le Nôtre remained for forty years in the service of Louis XIV. Probably no gardener ever enjoyed such magnificent opportunities for practising his craft. Louis gave him carte-blanche to do as he chose, and he heaped honours and benefits upon him. 'When Le Nôtre was sixty-two, Louis insisted upon making him a chevalier of the Order of St. Michael, and suggested that he should adopt a coat-of-arms, which suggestion he laughingly declined, saying that he had one ready made—three snails surrounding a spade and surmounted by a cabbage leaf.'

The remaining chapters deal with French gardens of the later seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, garden design in the Netherlands, English gardens of the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, German and Austrian gardens, garden design in Spain, and the English landscape school and its influence on the Continent. A very copious bibliography will be found useful by those who desire to make a further study of the subject or any branch of it. The book is most lavishly illustrated throughout, and it is obvious that no pains have been spared by either author or publisher upon its production." Journal of the Royal Society of Arts, 1913.

Fabre, Poet of Science

By C. V. Legros

"Dr. C. V. Legros has given us a rare biography in these days of slash and sensationalism, which Mr. Bernard Miall has translated into good, unaffected English from the French original. Dr. Legros describes Fabre's character as that of one of nature's poet-lovers. He is no dry dissecting student of pistils and stamens who cannot see a flower without tearing its petals and who sets no value on its perfume. Fabre is a priest of nature, learned in her rituals, initiated into her secrets, one whom 'Nature the old nurse' took upon her knee at an early age, and who shares the Christlike love of S. Francis for 'my brothers the birds and my sister the water.' He has called the yellow-winged wasp, the Sphex, 'the brown violinist of the clods.' As some ancient philosopher of Egypt he has watched the habits of the beetle the Egyptians immortalised in the scarabæus, that symbol of divinity, the 'Scarabæus sacer, with his incurved feet and clumsy legs,' who begins to roll his everlasting pellet, and, stripping it of its embroidery of fiction, demonstrated that its true story was even more marvellous than the most delicate fairy tale. He has been that rarest combination of the modern soul with the fantastic and beautiful Pagan—a Poet of Science—and all who love the more mysterious aspects of the hidden Hertha spirit of the world-tree Yggdrasil will find much joy in perusing this life history of one of her most diligent and exquisite seekers." Saturday review, 1913.

Food and Flavor

By Henry T. Finck

"This is properly not a book, but a tract, a concio ad populum, a clamorous appeal to every man and every woman to mend their dietetic ways...

The main thesis of the work is the paramount importance of Flavor (always with a capital F) in the consideration of food value. We are emphatically and constantly reminded that it is not the taste but the flavor which gives us our basis of judgment of the merit or demerit of food. The old dogma, de gustibus non est disputandum, must go to the wall. The very thing we are to dispute about is the question of taste, or rather of flavor...

Broad is the domain covered by Mr. Finck in his chase for food worthy of his best attention. Copenhagen fish, Italian pastes, German and English hams, American pie, cheese of every nation and clime—nothing is too delicate or too lowly to escape his shrewd attention provided that the food is honest and pleasing. It is true that the subject Flavor is often lost sight of, and here again Mr. Finck's long experience of quite another sort stands him in good stead. Primarily, he is a musical critic, and he knows just what to do when he seems to lose the thread of narrative. Just as we are beginning to wonder what all these charmingly informal but most instructive pages have to do with Flavor, suddenly a horn (in this case a dinner-horn) sounds in the distance, and lo! the leit-motif appears and we are once more skilfully involved in the arguments in regard to Flavor and its relations to food—the whole process is highly operatic...

In spite of some disheartening remarks at the beginning about our gastronomic conditions, towards the end of his tale Mr. Finck brightens visibly and sees a glorious dietetic future for this country. And why, indeed, should not his hopes be realized? While other countries stick for the most part to their own established dietaries, we are getting an astonishing familiarity with the foods and eating customs of all Christendom and even of heathenness. Any day at noon in the downtown parts of all cities, you shall see stout and rosy butchers, once scornful of all food but the eternal rump steak or pork chop, now up to the eyebrows in the joyous excitement of Italian ravioli or Hungarian goulash, or German rinderbrust. Bismarck herring, Spanish omelet, the humble Chinese chop-suey, Mexican enchilada, West Indian avocados, all these and many other good things are no longer weird novelties to the American palate, and Mr. Finck cheers us with the assurance that we eat them because they have distinct and often delicious flavor...

Putting the French first in gastronomic matters, Mr. Finck is not subservient. He defends, for instance, the early American breakfast as against the Gallic coffee and roll, and on his unfurled standard is inscribed the word 'pie' à la mort...

So brimming are these pages with good nature, the hopeful American spirit, the evident wish to do good, and to make people healthier and happier, that it is an easy thing to forgive the lack of orderly precision, the violent explosions of personal feeling or belief, the frequent 'journalistic' nature of the style. The faults seem small when the real good accomplished is so great." Nation, 1913.

Reclaiming the Old House

By Charles Edward Hooper

"Charles Edward Hooper, in his 'Reclaiming the Old House,' gives a great deal of sound advice to those who, with moderate means and some antiquarian taste, wish to establish themselves in modest country homes. He is probably justified in assuming, as he does, that people of this type are, as a rule, ignorant of methods of construction and have little knowledge of country life. His book contains a large number of plates, showing old, and often abandoned, houses that may be suitable for, or that have been so altered as to become, comfortable and attractive places of residence." Nation, 1913.

Architecture

Embury, Aymar. q 724.9 E58

The Dutch colonial house; its origin, design, modern plan and construction, illustrated with photographs of old examples and American adaptations of the style. 1913. McBride. (Country house library.)

Contents: Introduction.—The genesis of the style.—Materials.—The treatment of the roof.—Doors and windows.—Plan.—The treatment of the principal rooms.—Furniture and decoration.

Havell, Ernest Binfield. qb 720.954 H35

Indian architecture; its psychology, structure and history from the first Muhammadan invasion to the present day. 1913. Murray.

Author shows that Indian art has been a continuous development, influenced only in externals by foreign invaders. He deplores the neglect and decline of such craftsmanship and finally makes a plea for the use of Indian designs by native artificers in the building of the new Delhi. Many full-page illustrations.

Hooper, Charles Edward. q 728 H77r

Reclaiming the old house; its modern problems and their solution as governed by the methods of its builders. 1913. McBride.

Contents: Selection.—Planning.—Exterior details.—Interior details.—Hardware.—Furniture.—A practical example.—Outbuildings, etc.—The garden.—Fences and enclosures.—Glossary.

"Gives detailed directions for properly incorporating present-day conveniences in the architecture of the old-time house without essentially disturbing its traditions or charm." Dial, 1913.

Jones, Sydney R.

qr 728 J410

Old houses in Holland; text and illustrations by S. R. Jones, with some additional plates in colour after other artists; ed. by Charles Holme. 1913. (Studio. Special spring number, 1913.)

An introductory chapter on architectural development in the old towns is followed by an excellent description of the features of domestic architecture, which the author considers peculiarly expressive of Dutch genius. Interior and exterior details are carefully treated. Many full-page illustrations.

Writing English prose. 1913. Holt. (Home university library of modern knowledge.)

"Note on books," p.249-250.

"The following chapters deal, in a necessarily incomplete way, with the more important facts...to which...the attention of the student...may profitably be directed... The bulk of the space...is about equally divided between composition, or the arrangement of material, and...style, that is, words combined into sentences. A final chapter or two is given to special matters." Chapter 1.

Fowler, Nathaniel Clark.

808.3 F84

The art of story writing; facts and information about literary work of practical value to both amateur and professional writers. 1913. Sully.

Not a study of literary composition, but a useful handbook written purely from the practical and commercial standpoint. The author furnishes some plain suggestions to be followed in writing various forms of stories and also considers such subjects as proof-reading, the handling of manuscripts, contracts with publishers, copyrights, the income of book writers, etc.

Other Countries—Travel and Description

Chamberlin, Frederick Carleton. 919-14 C35

The Philippine problem, 1898-1913. 1913. Little.

"Beginning with a brief survey of the history and geography of the islands, Mr. Chamberlin describes conditions as they existed in 1898 when American occupation began and proceeds to show what the United States has done in the way of civilizing and educating the Philippines and what the cost of the undertaking has been. The book closes with a discussion of present-day conditions and of the probabilities of future independence." Book review digest, 1913.

Crawford, Dan. 916-7 C87

Thinking black; 22 years without a break in the long grass of central Africa. [1913.] Doran.

Exposure of the horrors of the slave trade under Portuguese administration, written by one who lived for many years in the remote parts of Angola.

Curzon, Robert, baron de la Zouche. 915-6 C937a

Armenia; a year at Erzeroom and on the frontiers of Russia, Turkey and Persia. 1854. Harper.

Scholarly and entertaining book of travel, equal in interest and literary merit to his "Visits to monasteries of the Levant." Written during the year which he spent in Armenia as member of an important boundary commission.

Loti, Pierre, (pseud. of Julien Viaud). 915.9 L918

Siam; tr. from the French by W. P. Baines. Laurie.

"One of the slightest, but most characteristic of his recent books—an account of the ruined temples of Angkor-Vat built up on a reminiscence of his childhood, and completed by a return to the home of his youth and a renewal of its dreams. The translation is very good in view of the intrinsic difficulties of a style which depends on romantic sensitiveness of temperament and hardly carries over into another language. The illustrations...are pleasing in form and colour." Athenaeum, 1913.

Die reise nach Afrika. 1913.

Murray, James, & Marston, George. 919.9 M978

Antarctic days; sketches of the homely side of polar life, illustrated by the authors, and introduced by Sir Ernest Shackleton. 1913. Melrose.

Two members of the Shackleton expedition of 1907 here record in unconventional, humorous style the daily incidents of the voyage on board the Nimrod and the journey across the snow fields.

Putnam, George Palmer, b. 1887. 917.28 P99

Southland of North America; rambles and observations in Central America during the year 1912. 1913. Putnam.

"Bibliography," p.424-425.

Purely a book of travel and not a study of political conditions. The region covered by the travelers lies between Panama and Guatemala and the chief interest of the book is in its description of out-of-the-way places. Fully illustrated.

Some of Pittsburgh's Early Libraries

By A. L. Hardy

Reprinted from the Pittsburgh Gazette Times, March 30, 1913.

So far as the records indicate, the first suggestion for a library of any character [in Pittsburgh] was made by Editor John Scull, in the columns of The Gazette in the summer of 1787, the year following the establishment of that pioneer journal. However, it does not appear that any action was taken toward carrying out such a project, until one John Boyd, a recent arrival from the other side of the Alleghenies, who is said to have been quite a literary character, and a confirmed book-worm as well, caused to be printed in The Gazette of July 26, 1788, a prospectus, in which he outlined a plan for the creation of a circulating library, funds for which he proposed to raise by public subscription.

In calling attention to the enterprise, Mr. Boyd, among other things, had this to say: "The proprietor engages to furnish to the subscribers all the new publications in America; the different magazines, etc., throughout the continent, and all the political and other pamphlets and publications in, or interesting to, the state of Pennsylvania."

There were then less than 5,000 people in the borough. The line of demarcation between the business and residential districts was not as well defined as in after years. The stores, shops and homes of the people were pretty generally located within the limits bounded by the Monongahela and Allegheny River fronts, Ross street or Grant's Hill, on the east, and Strawberry alley, or Ninth street, on the north. Mr. Boyd made an active canvass of the town, and succeeded in securing sufficient guarantees to enable him to establish his book exchange in the newspaper office, where, for several years, he supplied his patrons "with the latest publications from the presses of New York and Philadelphia." But in the end, for want of patronage, he was obliged to suspend, and the readers of the town who did not own private collections were without library facilities until June, 1802, when Zadoc Cramer came here from "Little Washington," bought out a run-down bookstore and printing office in Water street, between Second and Ferry, and shortly afterward, in response to a general demand, established a private circulating library. He did not appeal to the public for aid; made the investment upon his own responsibility, and at the end of the second year took occasion, through The Gazette, to express his gratitude to the people for their continued support, at the same time stating that the venture had thus far proved highly successful. Mr. Cramer continued the circulating feature of his book trade for a number of years, or until obliged to discontinue, owing to the magnitude of his printing and bookbinding business.

In March, 1812, Thomas Davis, who resided on the south side of Fourth street between Wood and Market, advertised in The Gazette that he had established "a small circulating library at his home, for the benefit of the children and youths of this vicinity," coupling the announcement with a statement that is said to have somewhat restricted his clientele. Said he: "Terms of access to this library will be made easy to all, but especially to such as will abstain from immorality of every kind, and read a portion of the scriptures every day"...

It was not, however, until the fall of 1813, that the question of a community Library took definite shape, when in response to the efforts "of many leading and progressive citizens," there was organized "The Pittsburgh Library Company." On the evening of November 27, 1813, about 40 representative people assembled in the spacious "bar room" of the "Green Tree Inn," at the northwest corner of Fifth and Wood streets, where the First National Bank now stands, and took the initiative in the formation of Pittsburgh's first real public library. Viewed from an historic standpoint, it is perhaps of present interest, to recall the gentlemen who comprised the first official directory of that organization. Its first president was the Rev. Francis Herron, for 40 years pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. The secretary was Aquila M. Bolton, "land broker and conveyancer." The treasurer was Col. John Spear, a retired merchant, while the board of directors included John M. Snowden, editor of the Commonwealth, Henry Baldwin, a leader at the Allegheny bar, and subsequently in Congress from this district; John B. Trevor, who manufactured white lead in Birmingham; Benjamin Bakewell, the glass manufacturer, who lived on the south side of Fourth street, between Cherry Alley and Grant street; George Poe, cashier of the famous old Bank of Discount and Deposit, the predecessor of the present Bank of Pittsburgh; William Wilkins, the "grand old man" of his day, Secretary of the United States Treasury, and Minister to Russia, who lived through the events of three wars, and died full of honors at his home in Wilkinsburg in June, 1865; Lewis Bollman, a prominent merchant; Walter Forward, who began his career as editor of Hugh Henry Brackenridge's "Tree of Liberty," became one of the foremost attorneys of the state, Secretary of the Treasury during the Tyler regime, and subsequently United States Minister to The Hague; Robert Patterson, bookseller, who published the pamphlet "Who Wrote the Book of Mormon?" Dr. James Reynolds, a well known physician; and James Lee and Samuel Roberts, both central figures in the commercial life of the town. A constitution drafted by a committee consisting of the Rev. Mr. Herron, Col. James O'Hara, William Wilkins, Anthony Beelen and Aquila M. Bolton was adopted at this meeting, and the name of the association was changed to "The Pittsburgh Permanent Library Company." Quite a sum of money was subscribed by citizens generally for the purchase of books, while many valuable volumes were either contributed or loaned by members, Messrs. Baldwin, O'Hara, Wilkins and Forward being especially mentioned for their generosity in this connection. The first headquarters of the library were in rooms "on Second street, opposite Squire Robert Graham's office," who at that time dispensed even handed justice at the northeast corner of Market and Second streets. Here the library remained until the county commissioners set aside a commodious room in the Court House for its use.

In 1823 the mills and factories were employing a large number of apprentice boys and it was decided to establish a library and reading room for their exclusive use. With Thomas Bakewell as president; David McClean, editor of the Gazette, as secretary, and William Eichbaum, Sr., caretaker, the apprentices first found a home on Chancery Lane, but this soon proved inadequate, and application was made to the Councils to provide more desirable quarters. The idea being a popular one, the city fathers on May 2, 1825, passed a resolution "that the managers for the time being of the Apprentice Library be permitted to occupy the building on Third street at the end of Hay Scales Alley, for the purpose of a library room until the first of April next, and the mayor (John M. Snowden) is hereby directed to put the managers in possession of the same."

The library occupied three comfortably furnished, well lighted rooms. It was provided with such text books as applied more particularly to the various trades in which the boys were employed. There was also a liberal supply of current fiction, history and biography, as well as many of the elementary books used in the schools of that period. For some time the attendance was fairly good, except on pay days, when the apprentices, like their elders, were prone to celebrate those red letter occasions to the neglect of their educational opportunities. Mr. Eichbaum, in the dual capacity of city weighmaster and librarian, soon found that he had anything but a boy's job on his hands. Weighing hay, coal, and other commodities by day, and quelling incipient riots among his husky young patrons at night, became an onerous task. He bore up under the responsibility for a month or two, when, feeling that his remuneration was not commensurate with the labor performed, he addressed the following communication to the law makers.

Gentlemen of Both Councils:

Your weigh master, and petitioner, finding himself driven on account of the rent of the hay Scales being so high, and the amoliment arisen from the weighing is not signavit with the trouble and care taking with the hay Scales, besides the good intent of some of our good citizens Wishing to establish a library for instructin the youth of this city with Knolidge and good morals wich in time may prove benefishal to our cittens, for some aknowledgement should be made to your weigh master.

July 25, 1825.

WILLIAM EICHBAUM.

Unfortunately there is no record of what action the councils took regarding this quaint missive, but it is a fact that as the years passed the apprentices in whose interest this library was founded became neglectful of the advantages offered them, until in the late twenties, after fruitless efforts to revive the institution, the rooms were vacated, the books disposed of at public auction, and Mr. Eichbaum's services as librarian were dispensed with.

During the decade beginning with 1830 several efforts were made by individuals to establish circulating libraries and reading rooms, two or three of which were measurably successful.

In 1831, John I. Kay & Co. advertised that they had "opened" a circulating library in rooms over their store at 44 Market street. In 1835 Joseph A. Smith, a bookseller at 54 Fourth avenue, announced that he had established a private library and reading room at his store, and that his fee for all the privileges offered would be $2.50 per annum. The Washington Circulating Library was established in 1837, at the southwest corner of the Diamond, in the book store of Kennedy & Allen, who raised the yearly "fee" to $3. During the following year the Franklin Library Association was established. This, too, was a private venture, owned and conducted by Linton Rogers. At one time it contained about 2,000 volumes, and it appears that Mr. Rogers entertained rather higher ideals than his competitors, for he raised the limit and charged his patrons $5 per year for the use of the books and privileges of the reading room.

In the fall of 1835, the Gazette, after vainly endeavoring to arouse public interest upon the subject, printed the following somewhat caustic comment:

No public reading room or library open for the reception of those who might prefer a literary lounge, or rational enjoyment, to the orgies of the gambling table, and the social, though more sensual pleasures of the tavern. More than one desperate attempt has been made to establish and continue such a praiseworthy institution, but every such struggle was unheeded and unavailing, probably because our atmosphere is adverse to all intellectual improvement, and fatal to literary taste, or because the substantial and lucrative associations of trade, which are prosecuted with so much enthusiasm by our citizens, have deprived them of all inclination for pursuits merely mental.

The other newspapers commented in a similar vein, these efforts resulting in an aroused public sentiment, which germinated in an application for a charter under which "The Mercantile Library Association" was organized in October of that year. Headquarters were established in rooms on Fourth avenue near Wood street, and many books were purchased during the winter, but there seems to have been a lack of public interest, for during the following 10 years the library appears to have existed by sufferance rather than otherwise.

During the period referred to, the city made wonderful strides both in the direction of mercantile and educational progress. Two or three colleges were founded, and there was a decided improvement in the class of people who availed themselves of these prosperous conditions to establish permanent homes in the "Smoky City." A public library, therefore, became a vital necessity, and the reorganization of the Mercantile Library Association received serious consideration. Accordingly on the evening of July 15, 1847, a meeting of the friends of the movement was called at Atheneum Hall, at Market and Third streets, for the purpose of perfecting such an organization, but the attendance was so small as to somewhat discourage many who had expected a spontaneous outpouring of citizens. But there was one gentleman present who expressed himself in most vigorous terms regarding the apathy which seemed to prevail. This was R. H. Kerr, a retired merchant, who said among other things:

"The want of a public library is the disgrace of Pittsburgh. We are a working and an eating people, but is that all we are to do? We are to have a hospital for the sick; why not a library for the reading people? At a meeting for the relief of the Scotch, there was one man, and he (myself) went at it in earnest, and raised $37,000 for the Irish and $8,000 for the Scotch. If one man can do so much in such a case, how much can we do, though so few, to raise a library fund?"

At the adjourned meeting of July 29, the attendance was quite large, Mr. Kerr's remarks having apparently produced good effect. As the result of the discussion, "The Mercantile Library and Mechanics Institute" of Pittsburgh was organized; articles of incorporation applied for, and the following officers were elected with instructions to "float" the enterprise without delay: President, Samuel M. Wickersham; vice president, John Finley, Jr.; secretary, Robert Finley; treasurer, W. P. Townsend. Directors, John P. Hersh, David Holmes, Jacob Weaver, Charles H. Grant and William R. Nimick. Auditors, H. Holmes, Jr. and James S. Cosgrave...

Upon the receipt of the charter, the directors rented a suite of rooms in the second story of a building on Market between Third and Fourth streets, furnished them plainly, erected the necessary shelving and began the purchase of books. The following decade was marked by varying periods of success. Although the library at this time had nearly 4,000 volumes on the shelves, and to exceed 50 daily and weekly newspapers, magazines and other periodicals on file in the reading rooms, there was no appreciable increase either in public interest or attendance. These conditions continued practically until after the Civil War, when with the completion of the new library building and the election of the Hon. Felix R. Brunot as president, there was a marked change for the better. This public spirited citizen infused new life into the organization, succeeded in arousing sentiment in the direction of increased facilities and the adoption of more modern methods. Shortly after his election James M. Macrum became librarian.

Mr. Macrum died while on a visit abroad, and was succeeded by his daughter, Miss Mary Frances Macrum, who was in charge during the last years of the life of Pittsburgh's first library worthy the name.

Miss Macrum subsequently became an attaché of the Carnegie Library of Pittsburgh, and died two years ago.

One of the most interesting reminiscences in the literary and educational history of Pittsburgh, is the interest which, 60 years ago, centered about the private library of Col. James Anderson of Allegheny City. Col. Anderson was a wealthy iron manufacturer whose home was located on the north side of Ohio Lane (now Pennsylvania avenue), between Manhattan and Chartiers streets. Himself a student, and the owner of a fine library, he also was a philanthropist in the broadest sense. Discovering that there were quite a number of young boys in the vicinity of his home who were fond of books, he threw open the doors of his library to them, acted as librarian on Saturday nights, when books were exchanged; suggested the proper course of reading, and frequently discussed with the lads the subjects in which they were interested. The library became a school of instruction, at which a number of Pittsburgh's future business men acquired their first conception of the wide domain of literature. Most of these boys were sons of poor parents, and with few exceptions employed in the mills and factories.

Among this ambitious crowd of working boys was Master Andrew Carnegie, then about 13 years of age, who had forsaken the occupation of a bobbin boy in a cotton mill and was now "running" messages for the O'Reilly Telegraph Company. He lived with his mother in "Bare-foot Square," the world for him consisting of his home, the telegraph office and Col. Anderson's book shelves. He was an omnivorous reader, persistently asking questions, and always wanting to know why. With the knowledge thus acquired, and the kindly and judicious advice of his preceptor, the messenger boy of 1850 laid the foundation of a practical education. Some years ago, after his name had become a household word throughout the world, writing to a Pittsburgh friend, he thus referred to Col. Anderson, the benefactor of his boyhood days: "The depth of my gratitude to him increases every year I live. He opened the temple of knowledge to me."

In January, 1864, Mr. Brunot, who had served long and faithfully as president of the Mercantile Library Association, announced that he would not again be a candidate. At the annual meeting of the society held on the evening of January 14, in giving an account of his stewardship, he made the following remarkable statement which, taken in the light of future events, reads like a prophecy:

"We want a library of one hundred thousand volumes, rich and complete in every department of useful knowledge. We want, in connection with it, a collection of art, curiosities in natural science, autographs, coins, etc., worthy of the library. We want a building adapted for their accumulation and preservation, containing halls suitable for literary entertainments of a community which is capable of creating such a library and gallery for the elevation of themselves and their posterity."

The man who made possible the realization of Mr. Brunot's dream, who subsequently provided Pittsburgh with a library "rich and complete in every department of useful knowledge," who founded a magnificent gallery and museum "filled with the curiosities of natural science," and endowed one of the most renowned technical schools in the world, was then a resident of Pittsburgh, earning a nominal salary as assistant superintendent of a railway, with no idea that he was to live to witness the results of his generosity.

Folk-Tales and Other Stories Which May Be Dramatized and Played by Children

The stories are arranged so as to bring first on the list those for youngest children and those that may be most easily dramatized and acted. Under each title the original folk-lore collection from which the story has been taken and the sources containing the best versions are given first. Titles in parentheses are those under which the stories may be found in the books listed.

Story of the three bears.

Jacobs. English fairy tales.

Lang. Green fairy book.

These sources give the Southey version, which is the one preferred.

Elves and the shoemaker.

Grimm. Household stories. (The elves.)

Grimm. Household tales. (Elves and the cobbler.)

Grimm. Fairy tales.

Scudder. Book of fables and folk stories.

Reviews of Recent Books

Posters

By Charles Matlack Price

"In the preparation of this book the author was prompted by various considerations, and in its presentation has endeavored to give to these several considerations their proper relative importance.

While the book is designed to possess a certain historical value, it is intended primarily to develop an accurate, intelligent, comprehensive and basic critical analysis of poster design in Europe and America.

The illustrations, covering the entire range of significant posters to the present date, have been selected and arranged with much care, and with an idea of showing the underlying principles involved in poster-design with the greatest clearness, and only by examples which are the best from the greatest number of points of excellency, taking into consideration the several elements entering into their design.

It has seemed advisable not to confuse the purely æsthetic and psychological principles of design with any considerations of technical points relating to the actual details of painting, or with points relating to mechanical processes of reproduction and the like. These no less important practical considerations of the subject may be better presented in books devoted entirely to such matters.

A co-relative motive in the selection of the illustrations of the book has also been the desire to preserve, in a permanent and convenient form, many interesting and excellent posters which are hard to obtain, or of inconvenient bulk to preserve.

Many of the illustrations have been secured with considerable difficulty, some, indeed, being of a scarcity which makes their acquisition quite impossible to-day. In addition to these, it is my pleasure, owing to the generous co-operation of certain designers, to include some hitherto unpublished drawings." Foreword.

Livingstone and Newstead

By A. Z. Fraser

"This book was well worth writing; it has, what most books of the kind have not, a valid reason of being. Livingstone was truly a great man, a hero in the best sense, and anyone who from personal association can tell us of a great man from a point of view not known to the crowd has a right, if not a duty, to speak. Livingstone's happy life at Newstead Abbey, as the guest and intimate of the author's father and mother, shows him to us in a frankly human and wholly unofficial aspect. Here he was just a man, not the missionary nor the explorer, and of all things not a lion; and one sees more clearly for it why he was a great missionary and a great explorer. They are the impressions of a child, and a child is a good judge of men. This is true biography, the opposite of too many standard lives, written by writers, professionals who never knew their subject inside or out... But though the memories of Livingstone are the excuse for the book, which did not need excuse, to our mind they are not the best things in it. The picture of life in a great country house fifty years ago is well worth having, and, of course, such a background as the romantic abbey, with its lore of story culminating, and all but exploding, in Byron, helps it very much...

The picture of life at Newstead, given from memories of very early childhood, is almost strangely vivid, seeing how comparatively little is actually said... Looking at the picture of the daily round of this great house and household, its order, dignity, self-sufficiency, the intelligent recreation, the all-pervading authority of the mistress earning the regard of good servants, the hostess who fitted all her innumerable guests into the machinery of the house without irking them, must we not admit that it all leaves a much more satisfying impression than the unordered jollity of such a house to-day?... The picture of the household leaves one thinking chiefly of its centre-figure, also, in our judgment, the centre-figure of the book—Mrs. W. F. Webb, the author's mother. Perhaps because there is no deliberate attempt to draw a portrait of this lady the author has made her live... This able, sensible woman, this lady of infinite charm and gentleness, this aristocratic Christian dominates the book, and yet is never pushed forward. We feel sure that somehow the author has made her mother appear to the reader just as she was, as mother, wife, mistress and hostess. This is because she has not described her but let her appear." Saturday review, 1913.

The Renaissance

By Arthur, Count Gobineau

"Born in 1816 of a noble family, Arthur Gobineau was a bookish youth, and a reader and thinker at the age when most of his class devoted themselves to dissipation. In 1848, he served De Tocqueville as secretary. Then he entered the diplomatic career, filling minor posts at Berne, Frankfort, and other places. He spent three years as first secretary at Teheran, thereby getting material for his 'Histoire des Perses.' For nearly twenty years he alternated between short sojourns in Paris and service at Athens, Rio de Janeiro, Stockholm, and the East. He died in 1882. The year before, he fell in with Richard Wagner, who, captivated by Gobineau's views on aristocracy and artists, published, in the Bayreuther Blätter, an article by him on 'Heroism and Christianity.' This led to the 'discovery' of Gobineau by the Germans, who soon came to accept as gospel Gobineau's laws of race supremacy...

[In] his 'Renaissance,' published in 1877... Gobineau writes objectively, seeking neither to preach nor to persuade, but simply to exhibit the chief figures of that period in typical acts and utterances. He uses the dialogue as his medium, a device which lends objectivity to his portraits and has the advantage of sparing the reader long descriptions and explanations. But mere dialogue does not always result in dramatic quality, and on many occasions it resolves itself into monologues in which, as in Browning's best examples, we cannot always separate the author from his creation. There must inevitably be in such work a suggestion of the knowledge that comes by retrospect, which the actors themselves could not have had. Nevertheless, the total effect is one of verisimilitude: Gobineau has caught the strange drama of the Italian Renaissance in many of its most marked features, and he has painted them with remorseless veracity...

Gobineau devotes his dialogues to the careers of Savonarola, Cæsar Borgia, Julius II, Leo X, and Michael Angelo. Round each of these protagonists he groups a host of contemporaries, nearly all of whom have historical antecedents. Beginning with Savonarola, he shows how, when the Roman Church had reached the highest point of corruption, that God-fearing, terribly earnest friar tried to reform the church from within, and how, despite his genius and his zeal and the support of a righteous remnant, he was crushed by the monstrous ecclesiastical machine as ruthlessly as an Alpine climber by an avalanche. Only second to Savonarola in this dialogue are Alexander VI and Machiavelli—the Borgia Pope bent wholly on securing the greatness of his dynasty and his own sensual gratifications, Machiavelli longing for some master—a Mohammed, or even a Tamerlane—to rise up and guide the revolution. It is not by accident that Gobineau puts into the Borgia Pope's mouth, not into Machiavelli's, the rules of statecraft which have passed for Machiavellian.

We cannot mention, much less criticise in detail, even the most salient passages in the 550 pages of these dialogues. For subtlety, no portrait excels that of Alexander VI, with his superstition, his cruelty, his man-of-the-world politeness, his love of luxury and of the fine arts... Cæsar Borgia is less complex, and his unblushing villainies necessarily shock us less than those of his father, whose position as head of the church made his iniquities tenfold worse. In Julius II we behold the familiar warrior-prelate, who loved fighting before all things, whose conscience troubled him with no scruples, who seemed at times to doubt the efficacy of the crucifix, but never that of the sword...

Gobineau, who professed himself a Roman Catholic to the end, had no quarrel with the church. To him, clerical corruption was merely an incident in the vast historic episode. He describes the sins and foibles of kings, soldiers, scholars, politicians, and artists with equally pitiless impartiality. Contrary, perhaps, to his intention, but wholly in harmony with the fact as he states it, the Renaissance, which we were to admire as the Golden Age when individualism, freed from moral restraints, was to blossom in a thousand beautiful talents, turns out to be the heyday of primitive lusts, passions, and ferocities. Even the artists, whose work alone remains to gladden posterity, seem mere accessories to the general orgy of Supermen. But Gobineau does not show us, we do not feel sure that he could show, an inevitable connection between moral and social degeneration and splendid achievements in art.

Nevertheless, Gobineau keeps the artist constantly in mind. The one figure who comes and goes through his dialogues is Michael Angelo, with whose death, indeed, he regards the Renaissance as closed. If there be any character in his dramatis personæ through whom the author himself seems to speak, it is precisely Michael Angelo...

So he puts into Michael Angelo's mouth, at the close of the book, what we may regard as his own summing up of the Renaissance:

I knew Brother Savonarola, and the aspect of his august face has never vanished from my memory. I have lived by his teachings. Either because he demanded too much of us, or because poor Italy presumed too much upon her forces and imagination in her was disproportioned to honesty, Italy quitted his hands and remained in those of vice. Yet, nevertheless, she felt herself; she was conscious of her superiority over the rest of the world. She despised other countries and used their resources for her own ends; they held her in admiration and she knew it. She knew that she was great and dreamed only of becoming greater. Her artists...you know what they have been! Now, all is over. The fire is extinguished. There exists no Italy more. Those whom we disdained become our masters. The artists have perished. I am the last survivor of the holy phalanx; what they call by the same glorious name we bore are now only traders, and not without impudence. It was time indeed to die! We die ill, miserably. What matter? There have been beautiful souls, glorious souls in this Italy, henceforth enslaved and prostrate. I do not regret to have lived...We leave great things after us and great examples. Earth is richer than she was before we came.

The restraint of utterance which characterizes this farewell belongs to Gobineau throughout his book. He is no maker of epigrams. He never resorts to rhetoric to heighten his effects...

'The Renaissance' remains essentially a true book, in which one of the most amazing episodes in history is vividly embodied. It extenuates nothing; it sets down naught in malice; it leaves you, in the main, to draw your own deductions. If Gobineau had possessed Voltaire's style, it might have been a literary masterpiece; but even so, one feels that it must have been easier deliberately to satirize wickedness in 'Candide' than to spread dispassionately on the vast canvas of 'The Renaissance' a host of persons who reveal themselves heart and soul to the life. With Gobineau to personalize the Renaissance, and Burckhardt to generalize its manners, customs, and ideals, one who is not a specialist can come at its essence.

Mr. Cohn's translation, although not distinguished, is readable, and, wherever we have compared it with the French we have found it trustworthy. Dr. Oscar Levy's introduction, whether in tone or substance, is most objectionable. That the fastidious aristocrat Gobineau, who detested vulgarians and disdained to take part in controversies or to defend his views in public—leaving his books to speak for him—should be championed by a ranting atheist, is irony without mitigation. It is not the atheism that he would object to; it is the crudity, the lack of knowledge, the vulgarity of manner, the raw-turnip flavor. We infer that Dr. Levy, who is Nietzsche's English sponsor, venerates Nietzsche, Stendhal, and Gobineau as mankind's supreme products. His introduction deals chiefly with Gobineau's theories of racial primacy and of aristocracy, with digressions in which he aims bungling sarcasm at the poor god of the nineteenth century, or assails H. S. Chamberlain, or expatiates on the blunders of the 'the hopeless Nazarene.' These topics, and many others, have nothing to do with 'The Renaissance.'" Nation, 1913.

New philosophy of Henri Bergson; tr. from the French by Vincent Benson. 1913. Holt.

"The body of this book consists of two articles by M. Le Roy which appeared...in the Revue des Deux Mondes...They aim at presenting, in as brief a form as possible, the general trend of M. Bergson's philosophy, which, the author strives to show, sets out to enrich intelligence by instinct, and demands an account of all the facts, its keynote being intuition. The present volume also contains, in the form of continuous notes, some additional explanations on points which did not come within the scope of investigation in the original articles...The author...pays particular attention to those points round which errors of interpretation more naturally gather, which have, he says, produced some astounding distortions of M. Bergson's philosophy." Athenaeum, 1913.

Adams, Brooks. 321.092 A21

Theory of social revolutions. 1913. Macmillan.

Contents: The collapse of capitalistic government.—The limitations of the judicial function.—American courts as legislative chambers.—The social equilibrium.—Political courts.—Inferences.

Mr Adams believes that the equilibrium of society shifts as new social forces appear and that the necessary adjustment to unfamiliar conditions brings about a social convulsion, "sometimes warlike and sometimes benign," which results in the evolution of new governing classes and reorganization of the social system. The administrative difficulties of the government furnish abundant material for illustration of his principles.

Bingham, Hiram, b. 1875. 327 B48

The Monroe doctrine; an obsolete shibboleth. 1913. Yale University Press.

"Attempts to sketch the growth of the Doctrine, to indicate the obligations and disadvantages it entails and, more particularly, to portray the attitude toward it and toward us of our neighbors to the south. Also to suggest, very briefly, the outlines of a new foreign policy...A readable, clear statement of the author's convictions, the result of four journeys to South America. The appendix gives the text of documents illustrative of the growth of the Monroe doctrine. Enlarged from an article in the Atlantic Monthly." A. L. A. booklist, 1913.

Fairchild, Henry Pratt. 325 F15

Immigration; a world movement and its American significance. 1913. Macmillan.

"Bibliography," p.439-449.

"It is of the American significance of immigration that Mr. Fairchild writes most effectively, although his effort to secure a wider outlook is not wholly fruitless. The value of his conclusions...depends not upon novelty, but rather upon the exactness of the statistical methods by which they are reached. The book is restrictionist in trend, but suggests no specific programme." North American review, 1913.

Ferguson, William Scott. 321 F38

Greek imperialism. 1913. Houghton.

Contents: Imperialism and the city-state.—Athens; an imperial democracy.—From Sparta to Aristotle.—Alexander the Great and world monarchy.—The Ptolemaic dynasty.—The Seleucid empire.—The empire of the Antigonids.

"Select bibliography" at the end of each chapter.

Haskin, Frederic J. 325 H33

The immigrant, an asset and a liability. 1913. Revell.

Presents the salient facts of the immigration problem in America, the coming of immigrant races, their entrance into American life, their relation to industry, education, crime, the white slave traffic, etc. Derived largely from United States government reports.

Contents: Mainly of origins.—Herbert and his fees.—The early censors at work.—Suppression and reaction.—Killigrew and the restoration drama.—The theatres act, 1737.—Larpent and Colman.—Political and religious objections.—The ban on sex.—The general position.—Conclusion.

"The story of censorship [of plays] is told from the fifteenth century to the presentation in June 1912 of a petition to the King for its abolition. This...is the best history—though it is not the best study—of the institution yet published—very full, stuffed with readable documents, and bringing into view a host of famous names." Saturday review, 1913.

Dramatization; selections from English classics adapted in dramatic form. 1913. Scott.

"Bibliography," pt. 1, p. 62-64.

Aim is to give practical suggestions for the dramatization of classics in the high school, including problems of staging, costuming and general setting. Specimen dramatizations are included, covering four years' work in connection with the teaching of English courses. Some of the works dramatized are: "Treasure Island," "Ivanhoe," "The Iliad," "Tale of two cities," "Silas Marner," "Vicar of Wakefield" and "Comus."

Stigand, Chauncy Hugh.799 S85h

Hunting the elephant in Africa, and other recollections of 13 years' wanderings. 1913. Macmillan.

Author recalls modestly yet dramatically his most remarkable adventures as a hunter of elephants and other big game. He also contrives to tell the reader much that is curious and interesting about the country itself and the traits of the natives. There is a chapter on African insects.

Keller, Helen Adams.814 K160

Out of the dark; essays, letters and addresses on physical and social vision. 1913. Doubleday.

"Contains her views on topics of the day. Most of the subjects relate to problems of the blind, but others deal with Socialism and with 'The Modern Woman.' The warmth and directness of Miss Keller's writing, with its imaginative quality and its occasional touches of humor and satiric comment, will probably interest her readers." Athenaeum, 1913.

Lang, Mrs Leonora Blanche.824 L239

Men, women and minxes, with prefatory note by Andrew Lang. 1913. Longmans.

Contents: A poseuse of the 18th century.—The social records of a Scotch family.—French and English minxes.—Pitfalls for collectors.—Paul de St. Victor.—Trials of the wife of a literary man.—A Paris correspondent of 1753.—The Fairchild family and their creator.—A granddaughter of Lady Mary Wortley Montagu.—Rousseau's ideal household.—Morals and manners in Richardson.—Art in country inns and lodging-houses.—The home-life of the Verneys.—Two centuries of American women.—Other people's friends.—The recollections of the baron de Frénilly.—Miss Grant of Rothiemurchus.—Poets as landscape painters.

Essays, full of gaiety, of keen perception, of curious knowledge unaffectedly shown, portraying the historical, literary and society figures of past days and ranging through the 17th, 18th and 19th centuries. Condensed from Spectator, 1912.

Ten more plays of Shakespeare. 1913. Holt.

Contents: Much ado about nothing.—Twelfth night; or, What you will.—Julius Cæsar.—Hamlet.—Measure for measure.—Othello.—King Lear.—King John.—Henry IV.—Henry V.

"Stopford Brooke avoids the methods of most students of Elizabethan drama. He is not interested in Shakespeare's relation to his own era...The plays are regarded as masterpieces which can stand the criticism of any age...In the main, the book comprises a series of pleasant, analytical appreciations which the average student may read with profit; at times the language rises to reverential eloquence." Nation, 1913.

The renaissance [1485-1560]: Savonarola, Cesare Borgia, Julius II, Leo X, Michael Angelo; English edition ed. by Oscar Levy. 1913. Heinemann.

"Not constructed as a drama, but as a series of detached dramatic episodes... They form a series of dialogues of introspection rather than dramas of action, which only a man of considerable and varied knowledge of the Renaissance could have written... But they do not convey the colour of life and its gorgeous inventions, the riot of art and letters, the audacity of speculation, the lavishness of wealth, the splendour of the time." Outlook (London), 1913.

Matthews, Brander.

822.33 D57

Shakspeare as a playwright. 1913. Scribner.

"To judge from internal evidence, this is in part a compilation of matter prepared for... lectures to college classes... It is attractive in style, quotes freely and aptly from acknowledged authorities, exhibits full and accurate knowledge, and discriminates carefully between what is actually known... and the more or less plausible deductions of guesswork... A scholarly and conscientious bit of work." Nation, 1913.

Wrench, Guy Theodore. Lord Lister; his life and work. [1913.]

"As a record of Lord Lister's life-work, and of the technical difficulties he had to overcome and the professional opposition he had to meet, when perfecting and introducing to the world... antiseptic surgery, this book leaves nothing to be desired. If Dr. Wrench errs at all, it is that we learn but little of Lister on the social side, though it must be admitted that the great surgeon... was so absorbed in his work that in a... record of his achievement the man himself is inevitably revealed... Dr. Wrench is somewhat severe upon the newer methods that were gradually introduced during Lister's time, and have now practically superseded the simpler methods of Lister himself." Outlook (London), 1913.

Spinner, Alice, (pseud. of Mrs Augusta Zelia (Webb) Fraser). Livingstone and Newstead. 1913. Murray.

Livingstone and his daughter spent eight months at Newstead abbey, once the home of the Byrons and at that time occupied by the author's father, who had known Livingstone in Africa. It is the picture of the explorer in relation to the daily home life of a large English country house, itself historic, that lends to this book both its value and its charm. Condensed from Athenaeum, 1913.

Lodge, Henry Cabot.

92 L765l

Early memories. 1913. Scribner.

Appeared in a condensed form in "Scribner's magazine," v.52-53, Sept. 1912-June 1913, under the title "Some early memories."

The period covered, that of the author's boyhood and early manhood, is virtually the last half of the 19th century. He was associated with most of the famous literary group of that time in Boston, and has specially interesting recollections of Charles Sumner.

Historical Society of the Diocese of Pittsburgh. "The Neville memorial;" services and addresses, November 2d, 1912, St. Luke's Church, Woodville, Pa.

Services at the unveiling of a memorial tablet to Gen. John Neville (1731-1803), citizen of Pittsburgh and general in the Revolution.

O'Higgins, Bernardo.

92 O183m

Mehegan, John J. O'Higgins of Chile; a brief sketch of his life and times. [1913.] Bennett.

Bernardo O'Higgins (1778-1842) took a prominent part in the revolution which freed the South American republics from Spain, and was at one time dictator of Chile. The narrative of his life furnishes also a clear and concise account of the complications that prevailed during those troubled times.

Pickett, George Edward.

92 P547pi

The heart of a soldier, as revealed in [his] intimate letters [with an introductory chapter from the one to whom these letters were written, La Salle Corbell Pickett]. 1913. Moyle.

Letters of Gen. Pickett, the hero of the charge at Gettysburg, written to his wife during the war. Interwoven with his messages of devotion are descriptions of events and glimpses of leaders on both sides of the battle-line.

"Chronology of the works of Augustus Saint-Gaudens," v.2, p.361-365.

Autobiography written during the last year of his life, arranged and edited by his son, with many letters written between 1870 and 1907. Gives a clear picture of his life as sculptor and teacher, and shows his capacity for long, delightful friendships.

Sheldon, Gilbert, 1598-1677.

92 S5448

Staley, Vernon. Life and times of Gilbert Sheldon, sometime warden of All Souls College, Oxford, bishop of London, archbishop of Canterbury and chancellor of the University of Oxford. 1913. Gardner.

"Mr. . . . Staley tells . . . the impressive story of his predecessor at the Rectory of Ickford. . . . Sheldon's name stands in history for the relentless persecution of the Puritans after the Restoration; and his admirable biographer makes no effort to defend this part of his record. . . . Mr. Staley endeavors to redress the balance by presenting his work as a whole and exhibiting his courage, his generosity, his breadth of interest." Contemporary review, 1913.

Smith, Goldwin.

92 S64828

Selection from Goldwin Smith's correspondence, comprising letters chiefly to and from his English friends, written between the years 1846 and 1910; collected by his literary executor, Arnold Haultain. 1913. Duffield.

"Covers the long span of years from his student life at Oxford. . . . until his death at Toronto. . . . His letters . . . are of unusual charm on account of their style and the author's vigorous personality; and they are of value to the student of history and politics because of the keen-edged criticisms with which Canadian and English problems are discussed. . . . Of his work as professor of history at Cornell, there is almost nothing in this volume." Nation, 1913.

Talleyrand-Périgord, Charles Maurice, prince de Bénévent.

Loliée, Frédéric. Prince Talleyrand and his times; adapted by Bryan O'Donnell. 1911. Long.

Contents: Talleyrand's childhood and early youth.—French society under Louis XVI.—Talleyrand and the revolution.—Thirty months in America.—Society under the Directoire.—Official and private life under the Consulate.—The dawn of the empire.—The zenith of Napoleon's power is near at hand.—The Napoleonic court.—In the wings at Erfurt.—Talleyrand's secret part in the overthrow of the empire.—Napoleon and Talleyrand.

M. Loliée has carried through his difficult task conscientiously and with considerable gusto. The present volume which is, it appears, to be followed by a second, carries the story down to 1814 and ends with a comparison of Napoleon and Talleyrand. The book goes into considerable details of domestic and international history, and is interspersed with pictures of the life and morals of the various societies in which Talleyrand moved. The translation is somewhat clumsy. Condensed from Spectator, 1912.

Escott, Thomas Hay Sweet. Anthony Trollope; his public services, private friends and literary originals. 1913. Lane.

"Bibliography of the first editions of the works of Anthony Trollope; comp. by Margaret Lavington, with notes drawn chiefly from his 'Autobiography,' and from information kindly given by his son, H. M. Trollope," p.309-334.

"Some of Mr. Escott's critical deliverances on Trollope err on the side of eulogy. . . . But the light thrown upon Trollope's use of his experiences in his political novels and the general relation of the man to his work, are invaluable features of a highly interesting and ably written book." Athenaeum, 1913.

 Notes on the life of Noah Webster; comp. by E. E. F. Ford, ed. by E. E. F. Skeel. 2v. 1912. Privately printed.
 "Check list of the writings of Noah Webster," v.2, p.523-540; "Authorities cited," v.2, p.541-544.
 Consists chiefly of letters to and from Webster, with extracts from his diaries and writings, woven into a narrative by his granddaughter. Designed "to defend his character, to justify his aims and to bring the facts of his life against the one-sided judgment of his latest biographer [H. E. Scudder]." Interesting also as a picture of New England life of the time (1758-1843).

Books for the Blind

The Library has a collection of about 2,000 books for the blind. The Pennsylvania Home Teaching Society and Free Circulating Library for the Blind supports in this district a teacher, herself totally blind, who, under the direction of this Library, visits the adult blind in their homes and teaches them to read. This service and the use of the books are absolutely free to all the adult blind in and near Pittsburgh, and the Librarian requests that names and addresses of such persons be sent to him in order that the teacher may call upon them.
